Each year, you, your friends, and other consumers purchase by mail order many items, including books, records, auto accessories, home furnishings, and novelty items. And each year complaints about mail-order items represent the single largest category of consumer complaints.

Failure to deliver, long delays in delivery, failure to provide refunds for undeliverable goods, and failure to answer letters of complaints are common problems.

You should know your responsibilities and rights when ordering merchandise by mail.

Your Responsibilities

You have certain responsibilities before ordering merchandise by mail. They include:

- Reading advertisements carefully before ordering. If the advertisement does not give complete information, write and inquire before ordering. Does the advertisement give all the information needed to make a purchase decision? Remember that it is hard to tell the actual size of an item from a photograph unless the ad states the size, or states that the photograph is actual size.

- Finding out if the merchandise can be returned or exchanged before ordering. When ordering merchandise such as clothing, it is difficult to make decisions about size and color without seeing the merchandise. It is important to know if the merchandise can be exchanged for a different item or returned for a refund.

- Considering the purchase carefully. Do you really need or want the item? Could you buy the same or a similar item locally?

- Knowing what kind of plan is involved when the mail order purchase includes joining a book or record club. The club may be one in which books or records are ordered. Or in one kind of negative option scheme you receive a notice that the book or record will be sent unless you return the notice indicating you do not want to purchase. In another kind of negative option scheme you receive the book or record and must send it back if you do not want to purchase it. In the negative option scheme, you must read mail carefully and return notices or unwanted goods. Otherwise, you will be buying things you may not have wanted.

After carefully reading the advertisement and considering the item to be purchased by mail, you should take care to give the proper information. Your complete address is necessary for delivery.

A common complaint from mail-order companies is that purchasers fail to give a complete address. Keep a copy of the order and the advertisement being answered and note where it was sent. Never send cash with an order. A cancelled check is proof that the order was received by the seller.

Make notation on the check of the name and address of the firm to which the check is being sent and fasten the check securely to the order.

Your Rights

You have certain rights when receiving mail-order merchandise or a refund for the items. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) regulation regarding the mail-order industry states that:

- Goods must be shipped within 30 days of receipt of the order or within the time disclosed in advertising.

- Companies that cannot deliver within this time period must offer the option of a refund or an additional waiting period.

- Following the second waiting period, the order is to be automatically cancelled and the money refunded unless you notify the company of willingness to wait even longer.

- A mail-order company must adjust a refund to a credit account within one billing cycle.

- Cash, check, or money-order purchases must be refunded within 7 days of a legitimate demand.

- You do not have to accept a refund in the form of "credit" for additional company merchandise.

Not covered by this FTC regulation are "services," such as photofinishing; magazines and other serials (such as book sets) except for initial shipments; seeds and growing plants; and C.O.D. orders.

Extension invites participation in its programs and offers them equally to all people.

Nondelivery

If merchandise has been ordered and has not been received on time, see first if the check sent with the order has been cashed. If you do not have the cancelled check notify the bank and give the date, number, and amount of the check and the name of the person to whom the check was payable. The bank then can tell the consumer if the check has been paid.

If the check has not been cashed, you can stop payment on the check and cancel the order. To cancel the order, write to the company, saying that since the check was not cashed the order was not accepted by the company and you have stopped payment on the check and cancelled the order.

Before stopping payment on a check, find out the charge for stopping payment. Most banks have a fee for a stop-payment order, often around $3. On small checks, you may want to gamble that the check is lost rather than stop payment and pay the bank charge. You would lose only the amount the check is written for. Ask "Is it worth paying a stop-payment fee of $..... in order to prevent the loss of the $..... (amount of the check)?"

If the check has been cashed, this means that you have paid for the merchandise. Since the merchandise has been paid for, you need to decide whether you want the merchandise sent or the money returned. Then make the demand for the merchandise or the money.

To make a demand send a letter to the company. Here is an idea of what to put in a letter of this type.

Dear

I sent you an order for (include complete description of item ordered) on (date). My check sent with the order was cashed. Attached is a photo copy of the cancelled check. This order should have been sent (within 30 days of the time specified in the ad).

In accordance with my right under the Federal Trade Commission Regulation regarding the mail-order industry, please (send me the order within 30 days or send me refund within 7 days from the date of this letter).

If the (order or refund) is not received within the time specified, I intend to file a complaint with the Federal Trade Commission.

Sincerely,

If you are not satisfied with the company's response, call or write the Mail Order Action Line (MOAL) sponsored by The Direct Mail/Marketing Association. This is a free service to help consumers with mail order complaints. The mailing address is MOAL, The Direct Mail/Marketing Association, 6 East 43rd Street, New York, NY 10017.

When you contact MOAL, state clearly the details of your complaint—the item or service ordered, a description of the product, and the name and address of the company and the date ordered. Include copies (not originals) of material that substantiates the complaint, such as cancelled check or money order, credit card invoices, and copy of the advertisement.

Send a copy of the letter to MOAL, to the mail order company, and to the Federal Trade Commission, Office of The Secretary, Correspondence Branch, 6th Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20580.

In addition the consumer might contact the publication that carried the advertisement and The Consumer Services Division, Department of Commerce, Labor and Industries Building, Salem, OR 97310, and The Consumer Protection Division, Department of Justice, 520 S.W. Yamhill, Portland, OR 97204.

If a large amount of money is involved, consult an attorney to see if there is a breach of contract involved and if you can obtain relief through the courts.

Mail Fraud

If the mail-order problem appears to be fraudulent, notify a Postal Inspector either directly or through the local postmaster.

If you believe mail fraud may exist, retain all letters (including envelopes) and other evidence related to the questionable schemes.

Check with neighbors and business associates to see if they have received similar materials. If so, urge them to complain also.

To stop a dishonest scheme, Postal Inspectors must find that people buying a product or service were cheated as a result of claims the seller made in an intentional effort to defraud. Mail-fraud violations occur when a general scheme or pattern of fraud exists.

Unordered Merchandise

If you receive goods in the mail that you did not order or did not agree to purchase, you or the person to whom the goods are addressed can consider the goods a gift. You may use the goods or dispose of them in any manner you see fit, with no obligation to the sender. The sender of unsolicited goods cannot mail any bill for such goods or try to collect any money.
