PROJECT GAIN

GAINING ACCESS TO INFORMATION NOW

Oregon State University Extension Service

There's not a lot of money. Creditors are making threatening sounds. At the same time, the kids need new shoes and it's time to apply for next year's operating loan. You're uncertain about the future. You need GAIN.

In times of financial stress, you and your family need accurate information so you can make decisions that are best for you. When you fully understand your situation, you'll be able to better cope with stress, identify all your options, and plan for the future with greater confidence.

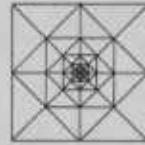

Project GAIN, "Gaining Access to Information Now," is the Oregon State University Extension Service's effort to help families facing financial difficulties. We created GAIN in response to the economic crisis faced by families who make their livelihoods from renewable resource industries such as agriculture, forestry, and commercial fishing.

GAIN is designed to assist families facing financial problems who request help. Response is quick and confidential.

At the same time, we're involving others in the community to assist financially-troubled families. We're recruiting other professionals, government agencies, and businesses to help provide solutions. And, we're changing our on-going Extension educational programs to emphasize family financial and business management.

Project GAIN can help if you and your family are involved in farming, forestry, commercial fishing, or other renewable resource industries and you:

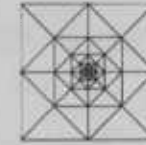

- need help analyzing the financial strength of your business (short-term survival may be the immediate goal)

- are financially solvent, but concerned with survival in the long run (planning to prevent financial stress may be the objective)
- have recently left your business or will do so in the near future (for some, this may mean referral to counseling, retraining, or employment agencies for help with managing stress and relocation)
- want financial stability by planning for unexpected medical expenses, transferring assets between generations, or improving tax and estate planning.

Specially-trained teams of Extension agents in agriculture, forestry, commercial fishing, home economics, and financial management are available to work with families in most Oregon counties. The teams can assist you by:

- analyzing your operation's financial condition and identifying problem areas and needed information
- providing a computer-generated financial analysis of your records
- identifying unusual or severe stress affecting your family
- identifying and putting you in touch with community resources
- determining options and consulting with your lender and other affected parties
- preparing a report and agreeing upon necessary action
- assisting with goal setting.

Community Support

Individuals, organizations, and government agencies play an important part of Project GAIN. They are concerned about what's happening in rural areas. They reflect the needs and concerns of each county and may include:

Farm loan review committees. Lenders, accountants, attorneys, financial consultants, and Extension agents contribute knowledge and experience as disinterested third parties. Committee members review financial situations and suggest alternatives.

Farm family support groups. Community support groups of neighboring farm families will be encouraged to assist in stress management and coping with crisis. We're training farm couples in stress management techniques to share with other families.

Community assistance networks. We're developing a network and directory of assistance. This includes professional legal, accounting, and counseling services, and employment and retraining information.

With the help of Project GAIN, you'll find answers for "where are we, where are we going, and how can we get there?" This will help you plan actions necessary for a successful financial future.

To Get Assistance

Call or visit your county office of the Oregon State University Extension Service. Addresses and telephone numbers are listed elsewhere in this folder. There will be no charge. On-site visits may be made by members of the Extension team.
