Problem: The purpose of this study is to make a listing of the occupations, activities connected with an occupation, and possessions connected with an occupation that require licensure in the state of Oregon.

Procedure: Material for the study was obtained primarily through research in the laws of the state of Oregon. A brief history of licensing was developed, and a study of the reasons for licensing was made. The various boards, commissions, and departments of the state also contributed information used in the thesis. The definitions and addresses used were obtained from various sources.

Summary: The listing includes some 250 occupations, activities, and possessions that are licensed, certified, and permitted by state law and are enforced through the various state departments, commissions, and boards. For example, such occupations as bartering, doctoring, butter grading, peddling, funeral directing, meat dealing, garbage feeding, engineering, guiding, pasteurizing, and watch making are among those listed.

In addition to the name of the occupation the listing gives a definition of the occupation and the address of the state enforcing agency to which a person might write for additional information. The listing in alphabetical and cross-indexed.

The listing will be valuable to high school and college students who are making their vocational plans, to high school counselors who are advising students and building up their occupational materials, to teachers who are making their subjects serve the needs of their students who may be going into a licensed profession or occupation, to high school librarians who are building up an occupational book shelf, to the principals and superintendents who are enforcing the licensing laws which pertain to their schools, to the out-of-school person who is entering or engaging in a licensed occupation, and to many others who are desiring information about the occupations that require licensure in Oregon.

OCCUPATIONS THAT REQUIRE LICENSURE IN OREGON

CHAPTER I
INTRODUCTION

Purpose of the Study

"Ignorance of the law is no excuse."

This study has been made with the expectation that it will inform the people of Oregon as to those occupations which require state licensure. It will serve as a reference for the high school or college student desiring to know, and thus to meet, the educational and other requirements of his future vocation if licensed.

Application for licenses is usually initiated by the person involved in the occupation. Hence, it is desirable that a person knows that his occupation demands such application, to whom the application is to be sent, and from whom additional information can be obtained. As a result another purpose of this study is to give him that information.

Statement of the Problem

The study was made to compile a list of those occupations, or any activities connected with such occupations, which are licensed by the state government of Oregon. The definition of the occupation as included in the law, if given, was also recorded. Since it was not in the scope of this study to give all the requirements that must be met before granting a license, the address of the state board, commission, or department which handles the licensing of each occupation was also recorded.

Definitions of Terms

"Occupations" as used in this study means the economic activity that is the lifework of an individual. (Each occupation that requires licensure is separately defined in the list.)

"Require" means that the occupation, by state law, is to be licensed through a state commission, board, or department.

"Licensure" is the permission from the authorities to carry on a certain business otherwise illegal. Many acts, lawful in themselves, are regulated by statutory authority and licenses must be obtained. The document embodying such permission is called a "license." A license is revokable and it is not transferable. The word "Licensure" as used in this study shall also include certification and registration if initiated by the person involved in the occupation. The word "license" shall include certificate, permit, and title.

"Oregon" limits this study to the occupations licensed by the state and does not include county, city, or national licensing.

Sources of Data

The bulk of the information used in this study was obtained from the following sources:

1. The Oregon Compiled Laws Annotated, which includes all Oregon laws up to and including those enacted in 1940.
2. The Oregon Laws, from 1940 up to and including those enacted in 1947.
3. The Oregon Blue Book, for the addresses of the boards, commissions, and departments that issue licenses.
4. The material prepared and issued by the various state commissions, boards, and departments.

Limitations of the Study

The list of occupational licenses might not be complete because:

1. There is no other list to which it could be compared,
2. The method used of searching the laws could result in an omission,
3. New laws are being enacted and old ones are being repealed and altered.
CHAPTER II
BACKGROUND OF THE PROBLEM

History of Licensing

As long as there has been organized government there also has been the licensing system. All governments have permitted some special person to perform some special act that was declared unlawful for another to do.

Our licensing heritage goes back to the English government. Existing today in England is the "licensed victualler" who can trace his name back to the seventeenth century when the government ceased licensing the keeper of the "victualling house" who not only served food and liquor but was required to render to the community "social service." (15, p.28)

John Milton, in his famous pamphlet, Aeropagetica (1644) said practically all that can be said on the necessity of unlicensing the then licensed printing. (I, p.798)

The political system of licensure did not come to Oregon until 1854. The United States did not provide a system of laws in Oregon while it was under the joint occupancy of England and the United States. In 1843, at Champoeg, a provisional government was installed which was patterned after the statutes of Iowa. Two years later at Oregon City the first regular session of the provincial government was held. By an act of Congress in 1848 Oregon was made a territory. And in 1859 Oregon became a state.

While as a territory Oregon passed its first licensing law on January 18, 1854. It read:

No person shall be permitted to sell spirituous liquors. . . by less than one quart, without having obtained a license from the county court of the proper county.

(such person) shall pay into the county treasury the sum of one hundred dollars per annum. . . a bond in the penal sum of five hundred dollars. . . and obtain signatures of a majority of the whole number of legal voters. . . that said license may be granted. (2, p.771-772)

The same law included provisions for the licensing of billiard tables, "ball alleys," and peddlers. Ferries were licensed two weeks later. And in 1864, "hurdy gurdy or dance houses" were licensed at one hundred dollars per month. (2, p.775)

The state of Oregon has continued to pass licensing regulations until today over two hundred licenses, permits, and certificates are issued through the agencies of the state government.

Analysis of Other Studies

As far as the writer has been able to determine there has been only one other recent attempt to make a listing of the licenses that Oregon uses. The Secretary of State has no complete list other than a list of the licenses handled through his department. Mr. R. A. Harris of Salem has published a list of the licenses issued by the state and Marion County. (13, p.44-48) This list, however, was not complete nor did it include a definition of the occupation that was licensed.

Reasons for Licensure

The licensing system is another governmental control used to protect the people against themselves and to provide for their general welfare. It also has been found to be a useful instrument for the less scrupulous. A review of some of the main reasons for licensure will show this to be true.

Although originally the collection of fees in relation to licenses was to take care of the expenses of the department in issuing and recording licenses, this collection has been expanded to where it is now an approved source of revenue for governments. The American City (11, p.64) states that "many municipalities are neglecting as sources of revenue certain forms of business licenses or taxes that are in successful use elsewhere. In Buffalo these fees aggregate two hundred thousand dollars a year."

Mr. Ernest Hahne, writing for the American Academy of Political and Social Sciences, states that:

The use of the license as a method of plugging up leaks occurring elsewhere in the tax system, the apparent justice of causing those businesses and professions which are subjected to new regulations bear the added costs of these new governmental functions, the relative convenience of raising revenue from the standpoint of the collector's office. . . all these factors in varying degrees have aroused renewed interest in the license as a possible source of increased local revenue. . . The revenue element is therefore becoming almost as important as the regulatory element in the license system. (12, p.133-134)

As a protection of the public's health the license has been of service. Sanitation requirements must be met by many before they are issued a license. All healing practitioners dealing directly with the public's health, such as doctors and nurses, are all carefully regulated by the licensing system.

Licenses give to a certain degree a guarantee of competence. Architects, engineers, dentists, and others are not allowed to practice their profession until their competency has been examined and approved by a licensing board. Continued competence is assured by the right of the board to revoke a license at any time it deems expedient for a reason stated in the law.

The citizenry are somewhat protected from physical injury by the licensing of firearms, elevators, and other items. They are also protected from financial and property loss by the strict regulation of banks, electrical wiring to prevent fires, and other activities.

The animals and natural resources of the state are conserved by licensing procedure. Hunting and fishing licenses are required. And all logging and mining operations are carefully restrained.

Fair business practices are encouraged by licensing. Standards of weights and measures, grading terms, and legal procedures for corporations are examples of this function of licensing.

Children's welfare is protected by the issuing of permits for child labor and the careful inspection of foster homes and other child caring agencies.

The morals of the state are also upheld by licensing. Gambling and the use of drugs and liquor are closely controlled by licensing. Quite often the first use of licensing in many localities was for this purpose.

But although licensing has done much good in promoting the general welfare, it also has been used for less noble purposes. Licensing can be used as a discriminatory power by the licensing officials. For example, quoting from the Christian Century:

Jehova's Witnesses complained of a local licensing requirement of distributors of pamphlets. Jehovah's Witnesses were distributing religious literature. The United States Supreme Court upheld the local ordinance. But they mentioned that "in the minds of the municipalities which passed the ordinances, the inclusion of Jehovah's Witnesses may well have been more than incidental. . . This is a net that may be used to catch anybody. . . Any group may clash with (the law) by being refused a license upon application. . . There can be no assurance that the granting of licenses will be non-discrimi-atory. . . The power to license, with no guarantee that it will be non-discriminatory, always implies the power to censor and to suppress." (1, p.798)

Police power of licensing has also been used by governments as a control over business. This frequently has brought vehement protests from business. Roosevelt once threatened to license automobile manufacturers, but he retreated when he discovered that the automobile manufacturers were just a "spearhead for big business as a whole." (14, p.458) The automobile manufacturers dared Roosevelt to impose a license on them. Nation (14, p.458) felt he should have done it. "If government could not control industry then industry was bound to control government because government was inevitably the creation and servant of industry." Roosevelt may have had the last chance to test whether political democracy can dominate industry.

And finally, quoting again from the Christian Century:

The regulation of competition by licenses is most clearly shown in the licensing of professions. . . Prerequisites. . . include minimum age, educational qualifications, practical experience, written and physical examination, good character. . . Another method of regulation of competition by licenses is to make the payment so high that it becomes inaccessible to members of the poorer classes. . . Certain governments limit the number of licenses that are issued annually. . . Fees paid according to gross receipts frequently are harder on new and beginning businesses than established firms. (12, p.134)
Although the preceding discussion does not include all the reasons for licensing, it does show how licensing can be both beneficial and dangerous.
CHAPTER III

A LISTING OF THE OCCUPATIONS REQUIRING LICENSURE

On the following pages is a list of (a) the occupations that require licensure, (b) the activities that require licensure and are a part of some occupation, and (c) the possessions that require licensure and are a part of some occupation. The occupations, activities, and possessions are listed in alphabetical order and are cross-indexed. Following each is a definition that was copied from the law if a definition were given. If not given in the law, a definition was found in the dictionary or some other reference work. Finally, the address of the board, commission, or department is given to which an interested person should write for information about the requirements and fees for the license.

Some two hundred and thirty occupations have been presented with a definition of the occupation and the address to which a person might write for licensing information.

Particularly, it is hoped that this information will be of value to the high school or college student planning his future vocation and desiring information on which occupations are licensed as well as what educational and other requirements are needed for a particular vocation.

Counselors will find the list helpful in advising students as they prepare for those occupations for which they are best fitted. The addresses will serve as sources from which materials may be obtained and kept up-to-date. They will also serve as sources from which speakers for Career Days may be obtained.

Subject matter teachers desirous of listing those occupations for which their subject is required, as well as desirable, will do well to study this list for suggested occupations. Students should know as soon as possible if any special school subjects are required so as to avoid loss of time and effort. These teachers can enhance the value of their courses by including in them some of the elements that are required for the licensure of certain occupations. For example, mathematics teachers may include in their course of study those elements which pertain to engineering and surveying. The book-keeping teacher will be able to point out to advanced book-keeping students the requirements for certified public accountants and perhaps add a short unit on that and related occupations. Above all, subject matter teachers will be able to assist the counselor and the students by revealing which have high aptitude for subject matter which is necessary for success in an occupational field.

Social science teachers can make their classes interesting and alive through having students investigate those occupations within the state, county, or city which require licensure. This list is offered to them as a source check list. The system of licensure as a governmental control can be effectively analyzed by studying the listing and noting what occupations are licensed. Furthermore, in the study of state and local government it may be possible to have representatives in the community who are serving on these licensing boards appear before the classes as resource persons.

The librarian is afforded a list from which she may obtain materials for her occupational book shelf.

The principal or superintendent, as an administrator, will use the list as a check so that he is meeting the requirements of licensure pertaining to areas under his jurisdiction.

Students in school have brothers, sisters, and parents, as well as relatives, who engage in occupations. Part of their learning process will be the dissemination of information obtained in the school. Hence, the information on occupations requiring licensure presented in school will often find its way into the home where it serves as a guide to members of the family. It this way the school can serve the community through extended services.

This list may also be an aid to the out-of-school person desiring to know if his present or planned occupation demands licensure.

Finally, this list is offered to the Secretary of State who may have other requests (similar to the one which started the writer on this study) for a list of occupations that require licensure in Oregon.
