By BUD FORRESTER

UNTIL the close of President Arnold's administration, nothing was allowed to interfere with individual student's attention to his curricular work, and "public games, entertainments and exercises" were taboo. With Arnold's death and the arrival of John M. Bloss as president in 1892, however, extra-curricular activities and athletics were looked upon with favor for the first time.

In the spring of that year the College Athletic Club was invited by the Multnomah Amateur Athletic Club of Portland to participate in its first Annual Field Day on May 30.

Almost a year later the faculty baseball committee reported progress. "Orange" was adopted as the college color and Professors Washburn and Shaw were appointed a committee "to suggest to the students a suitable college cry." Professor Berchtold was appointed to accompany the band and the college athletes to Brownsville "at which place the members of the Athletic Association were to give an exhibition of their skill."

Football appeared that fall, and by 1896 the students were so far in advance of the faculty in athletic interest that a ban was necessary on "cheering during chapel exercises."

Throughout the nineties, however, in spite of increasing student interest and the staunch backing of professors Cordley, Berchtold and French, financial support was sadly lacking. Hopes for stability were almost wiped out when Mechanical Hall, where athletic equipment, dressing rooms and showers were located, was destroyed by fire in 1898.

With debts behind and no money ahead, Fred Walters, '00, captain of the '99 football team, called his teammates together for a fresh attack. John Gallagher, '00, was elected player-manager and replaced cold water, bucket showers with new warm showers. He piloted the team through a successful season financially, closing with all debts paid and a $75 profit on the books. In January of 1900, the Students' Athletic Union was organized with Walters as president, Bessie Smith, '00, as secretary, and Gallagher, manager-treasurer.

Not until then could any of the four major sports be termed properly organized. Men's basketball did not appear until two years later, and baseball not until 1907.

An Athletic Association, recognized by the faculty, had been apparent three years earlier, but the Union was the first permanent organization. The Northwest Intercollegiate Association was joined in 1902, and the Pacific Coast Conference was entered upon its formation in 1915.

Chapter 1--Football

OREGON STATE'S first football team appeared in 1893 under the coaching of Bill Bloss, a graduate of Purdue and son of John M. Bloss, president of the college. Bloss not only coached his players but also played along with them. Since that time Oregon State has had 17 different coaches whose teams have won 170 games, lost 120 and tied 32 games, and in so doing have rolled up 4,621 points against their opponents' 2443.

Outstanding years in this sport at Oregon State were 1907 when the team won six and lost none, scoring 137 points and holding their opponents to no score all season; 1914 when seven victories were scored against no defeats; 1925 with seven wins and two losses; 1926 when the record showed seven victories and one defeat, and 1933 with six wins and two losses. In many of the other years, however, good performances were turned in, but the Beavers failed to end up at the top of the percentage column.

While the selection of an all-star team of Orangemen is recognized as the most difficult of tasks, here are two teams of all-time all-stars who were selected by the vote of many former Oregon State football players, coaches and persons interested in the college and football over a long period of years:

FIRST TEAM

Ends — Bill McKalip, '31, and Dal Ward, '27.

Of Walter "Chief" Keck, the 1912 Orange said: "His rushes are like a cyclone — leaving a mass of hair, blood and twisted opponents in his wake." Charles "Shrimp" Reynolds never weighed more than 127 pounds when he played football, but as a quarterback and team leader he has had few peers.

Guards — Jules Carlson, '29, and Vern Eilers, '33.

Center — "Slim" Balcom, '30.

Quarterback — Howard Maple, '30.

Right Halfback — Hal Moe, '35.

Fullback — Wes Schulmerich, '27.

SECOND TEAM

Ends — Joe Wendlick, '39, and "Cac" Hubbard, '21.

Tackles — Percy Locey, '24, and Harry Field, '35.

Guards — Bill Tomsheck, '35, and Prescott Hutchins, '39.

Center — Ken Deming, '38.

Quarterback — Hal Pangle, '35.

Right Halfback — Carl Lodell, '21.

Fullback — Herman Abraham, '16, and Carl Wolff, '11.

It is interesting to note that the majority of "all-stars" date from the early 1920's to the present. On the second team, Locey and Lodell come from the pre-20's while only Abraham and Wolff could actually be considered "old timers." Wolff played from 1906 to 1909 and Abraham from 1913 to 1915. No attempt will be made to explain the absence of "old timers." Many players of the pre-20's era turned in all-star selections, but in most cases they named younger men as being more outstanding.

Of course there were many players who received only a few votes, not enough to give them more than honorable mention. And as this long list of honorable mentions is scanned one finds the names of many first-class football players who probably would give the all-star first and second stringers quite a battle for honors.

Here are a few of the many men on the honorable mention list:

Ends — Brewer Billie, '16, "Pec" Huntley, '10, Murius McFadden, '23, Orile Robbins, '28, John Logan, '28, Russ Striff, '30, "Cotton" Whitlock, '30, Don Holgate, '97, and Joel Emily, '06.

Tackles — Everett May, '14, Paul Hofer, '17, "Hip" Dickerson, '29, Bert Pilkington, '05, Leo Laythe, '16, Millard Scott, '24, Fred Walters, '00, and Frank Pendergrass, '11.

The 1915 team "that smeared a team that smashed a team of Yosts." Granland Rice wrote one of his famous jingles in the New York Tribune after O.A.C. had swamped the Michigan Aggies 20-0 — a team which the week before had defeated the famed Yost-coached Michigan team. This team started O.S.C.'s string of victories over powerful Eastern teams in which the school gained more recognition than in all of their conference series.

Everett May, right, who played at tackle in 1911, '12, and '13, as a halfback in 1914 and remained as a member of the coaching staff in 1915.

Guards — Otto Sitton, '12, Glenn Olmsted, '27, Bob Chrisman, '14, Stan McClurg, '37, Oz Walker, '20, and Clare Badley, '29.

Centers — "Pap Hayseed" McAlister, '97, Buck Hammer, '32, Clyde Devine, '35, Bob Geddes, '31, Bob Stewart, '22, and Francis Yeager, '16.

Quarterbacks — Joe Kasberger, '22, Charles "Shrimp" Reynolds, '13, "Scootie" Dutton, '19, Web Edwards, '28, "Tuffy" Conn, '20, John Rearden, '20, and Hughie McKenna, '23. Left Halfbacks — Art Lutz, '15, Floyd Williams, '05, and Clarence Bell, '26.

Right Halfbacks — Tommy Swanson, '38, "Cec" Sherwood, '35, Henry Hughes, '31, and "Ev" Miller, '24.

Fullbacks — "Chief" Keck, '11, "Gap" Powell, '23, Elmer Kolberg, '38, and Les Avrit, '31.

Oregon State's most successful football years under Coach Paul J. Schissler were '25, '26, and '27, and many players of that period are found on the all-star first or second teams. A few are Ward, Maple, Dixon, Carlson, Eilers, Balcom and Schulmerich.

Most successful years under Lon Stiner were 1933 and 1937. From the 1933 team come Tomsheck, Schwammel, Pangle, Fields and Franklin. From the 1937 team are Gray, Wendlick and Hutchins, the latter two of whom have one more year of competition and should reach great heights before the completion of their respective football careers.

In the all-star balloting, most votes went to McKalip, Dixon and Carlson. Extremely close voting was tabulated for the tackle position where Schwammel nosed out Locey for a first-string berth and at left halfback where Gray edged in ahead of Franklin.

Oregon State's only recognized All-American football players were Schwammel and Franklin. Last season Gray was headed straight for All-American recognition until a painful leg injury kept him from full-time competition in late season games.

Long-time observers of Oregon State football declare Lutz was one of the greatest performers to ever wear an Orange and Black uniform. Lutz probably has not received the recognition he deserves principally because he played only one season. Another player of whom all Oregon Staters have heard much is "Chief" Keck who played in 1908, '09, and '10. Keck fell a few votes short of second-team rating.

Oregon State maintained its enviable record in competition with Eastern teams on Thanksgiving Day, 1930, when the Beavers defeated the University of West Virginia 12-0 at Soldiers Field in Chicago. Here Bill McKalip is seen scampering across West Virginia's goal for his second touchdown of the game.

Probably the best utility man in Oregon State grid history, judging from all-star voting, was Lodell, who played at nearly every position on the team and was given votes for several different posts.

Although the Orangemen lost three games during the 1937 season, many consider the team's record of three victories, three defeats and three ties outstanding. The record is worthy principally because of the competition which the Beavers faced, meeting every team in the Pacific Coast conference.

Victories were scored over Washington, Oregon, and Willamette, and ties with Stanford, University of Southern California, and University of California at Los Angeles. It was Oregon State's first victory over Washington since 1928, and it was the first time in history the Orangemen were not defeated by Stanford. It also marked the second straight season that

In addition to Bloss, who coached the team in 1893 and again in 1897, Orange coaches have been Taylor, Tommy Code, Paul Downing, Frank Herbold, Stickney, McFadden, Dr. Steckle, F. S. Norcross, Sol Metsger, Schildmiller, Sam Dolan, E. J. M. D. Stewart, Joseph Pipal, W. H. Hargiss, R. B. Rutherford, Paul J. Schissler, and A. L. "Lonnie" Stiner.

Chapter 2--Basketball

EIGHT years after football had been introduced in 1893, basketball made its debut at Oregon State under the coaching of W. O. "Dad" Trine, who was also noted for his track coaching ability. Trine remained as coach until 1908 when E. D. Angell took over the job for two seasons. In 1910 Clifford Reed was the player-coach and remained one year when he was replaced in 1911 by E. J. Stewart who coached basketball from 1911 to 1916 and football from 1913 to 1916. In Stewart's last season, the Orangemen tied with the University of California for the Pacific Coast championship, and since this was before the formation of the present northern and southern division conferences, there was no regular playoff for the Coast championship.

"Ade" Sieberts, left, above, captain of the 1916 team, who was selected for two consecutive years as an All-Coast forward. Through the leadership of Captain Sieberts, the 1916 "Aggie" quintet tied with the University of California for the Coast championship.

When Stewart left in 1916, Everett May took charge of the sport and remained until 1917 when Howard Ray, '18, was the coach-player. Since that time Bill Hargiss, Dick Rutherford, Bob Hager, and Amory T. "Slats" Gill, '27, have all had their part in developing Oregon State's basketball teams.

An all-time all-star team in this particular sport would probably find the names of the following:

Forwards — Wally Palmberg, '39, "Slats" Gill, '27, George Hibbard, '36, Art Merryman, '38, Dick Stinson, '22, Howard Ray, '18, "Red" Ridings, '26, and "Skeet" O'Connell, '35.

Centers — "Ed" Lewis, '34, "Mush" Hjelte, '23, and "Ade" Sieberts, '17.

Guards — "Red" McDonald, '34, Carl Lenchitsky, '34, Ken Fagans, '32, Rod Ballard, '31, Richard "Mose" Lyman, '35, Bob Bergstrom, '37, "Hub" Tuttle, '37, Lyle Richards, '24, Claude Swann, '07, John Eikelman, '22, and Ira Mix, '16.

This selection of all-stars probably does not include all of Oregon State's outstanding basketēers. No attempt was made to get a vote, making it necessary to select the best players from past records and through conversation with coaches and players who have followed the team's play from year to year.

Without doubt the two outstanding players of all time at Oregon State were Lewis and Palmberg. It was Lewis, who, in 1933, contributed more than any one player in Oregon State's victory over the University of Southern California and the annexation of the only coast conference championship ever to come to Oregon State. Lewis was given All-American recognition by sports writers, players and coaches throughout the country, for he was not only an excellent ball handler and good shot, but he was also a very capable team leader.

While Palmberg may not have had Lewis's leadership qualities, it is doubtful if the Pacific Coast Conference has ever seen a more polished performer. Many persons who have seen both Palmberg and Stanford's great "Hank" Luisetti agree that Palmberg ranked as high if not higher. Palmberg, whose name appeared on many All-American teams in his last year of competition, set a Northern division scoring record of 187 points in 16 games under the old jump-at-center rule. The record was broken in 1937 but at that time the rule was not in effect.

Gill, coach of many of Oregon State's best basketball players including the two "greats," Lewis and Palmberg, was an outstanding hoopster in his undergraduate days. He played in 1922, '23, and '24 and was an All-Coast star. In addition to Gill and Palmberg who were probably the best forwards ever to play for Oregon State, Hibbard, Merryman and O'Connell, all of whom were coached by Gill, and Stinson of 1921, '22, Ray of 1917 and '18, and Ridings of 1923, '24, and '25, were all outstanding forwards.

Hjelte of 1922 and '23, and Sieberts of 1915, '16 and '17, both turned in excellent performances during their varsity careers.

The best guards of the Gill era were Lenchitsky, McDonald, Fagans, Ballard, Lyman, Bergstrom, and Tuttle, of whom Bergstrom and Fagans were probably the most outstanding. Fagans was an excellent ball handler and a fine shot, and he was regarded by many as a flashier type of player than Bergstrom, although perhaps not quite as steady.

Richard "Mose" Lyman deserves much credit for Oregon State's winning of the Northern Division championship in 1935. Lyman returned to school that year after two seasons' absence, and he was the spark that made the Orangemen champions. Other outstanding guards were Richards of 1922, Swann of 1907, Eikelman of 1921 and '22, and Mix of 1916.

Oregon State's basketball has been most successful under the coaching of Gill, for since he took over the head coaching job in 1928, the Orangemen have won two Northern Division championships and one Pacific Coast conference title. In 1925 and '26 under Hager, the Orangemen won the Northern Division championship and lost the conference playoff series to the University of California.

Chapter 3--Baseball

ORGANIZED baseball teams made their debut at Oregon State College in 1907 when the only collegiate competition was provided by Willamette, Whitman and the University of Oregon. In 1910, however, the University of Washington, Washington State and the University of Idaho were added to the Orange schedule; and since that time the Northwest schools have maintained their own league but still schedule pre-season games with outside teams such as Willamette, Linfield, Pacific University, etc.

In glancing over the history of this particular sport at Oregon State, the names of certain men stand out as reminders of their performances on the diamond during their collegiate career.

If an all-star baseball nine was to be named it

Professional baseball sent Fielder Jones to Oregon State to coach in 1910. Jones had just completed the manager-ship of the "White Sox Hitless Wonders" and his presence drew crowds to the practices.

although few of them have continued to follow the game as a profession. Among the Beavers, however, who have played professional baseball are found Maple, who played with the Washington Senators of the American League for several seasons; Ed Coleman, who played outfield for several teams in the Pacific Coast League and with the Philadelphia Athletics in the American League and with the St. Louis Browns in the American League; Ed's older brother, Ralph, who pitched for Portland in the Pacific Coast League, and Baker, who was with the Los Angeles Angels in the Pacific Coast League for several seasons. No man has meant more to Oregon State baseball than Ralph Coleman, right. "Coley" hurled for the team in 1918 and then after five years returned to coach until 1931 when he gave up the post to handle intramural sports. retirement from the Pacific Coast League in 1937 Schulmerich managed the Lewiston, Idaho, club in the Western League, and went from there to play with Spokane.

Bouton, Escallier, Siegrist, Young and Brown also stepped from college into professional baseball, most of them starting in the Coast League and working into the big eastern leagues. Bouton and Escallier both had excellent possibilities of becoming brilliant players in professional baseball, but sustained injuries prohibiting their playing, and they were forced to retire from professional baseball.

A few of Oregon State's baseball coaches have been Joe Fay, Otto N. Moore, '11, "Felder" Jones, E. J. Stewart, Jesse Garrett, Wilkie Clark, Ray E. Goble, '16, Loof Flack, James Richardson, Guy Rathburn, "Slats" Gill, '27, and Ralph O. Coleman, '18.

Chapter 4--Track

ORGANIZED track and field teams began at Oregon State in 1906 under the coaching of W. O. "Dad" Trine, who was also the first basketball coach in 1901. Trine, however, was more widely recognized for his track coaching ability, and from the early history of athletics, it is found that he was respected and loved by the entire student body during the time he acted as "Physical Director." While serving as head track coach, he himself held records in the 50, 100, and 150-yard dash; the 220, the 440 and 880-yard runs Track and field events flourished particularly well under the able coaching of "Dad" Butler, whose teams not only made a fine showing on the Pacific Coast, but turned in some excellent performances at the Drake and Kansas Relays. Butler came to Oregon State in 1921 and remained here as head track coach and trainer until 1927 when he resigned to accept a position at Detroit University.

To "Dad" Butler goes the credit for developing one of the finest runners ever produced at Oregon State, Grant Swan, '22, who has been head track coach at the college since 1934. Swan holds the best mile record ever turned in by an Oregon State runner at any time, and that is 4:16.4 which he made at an American Legion meet in Buffalo in 1920. Another outstanding Oregon State miler was Ralph Coleman, '18, present director of intramural athletics.

Recognized as the greatest of Butler's runners, however, was Ray Dodge, '25, who set his half-mile record at an Oregon-Oregon State dual meet at Eugene in 1924, shortly after which he participated in the Olympic Games at Paris, France. Dodge's record, 1:56.1, for this particular event, still stands.

Swan's outstanding track product seems to be Duane Ackerson, '38, who served as captain of the 1937 Beaver track team. Ackerson probably jumps higher than any man in the country of the same height, for he stands only 5 feet 10½ inches. In competing at Eugene last year, he topped 6 feet 3 inches.

One of the highlights in Oregon State's track history was recorded in 1931 when a shuttle hurdle relay team composed of Jack DuFrane, '33, Bob Prentiss, '32, Marsh Dunkin, '35, and Ken Martin, '31, set a world record at 1:01.6. This particular team was coached by Dick Newman.

Chapter 5--Minor Sports

WRESTLING became a recognized sport at Oregon State in 1909 when O'Connel successfully coached the grapplers for one year, after which James Arbuthnot took over the coaching duties. Arbuthnot guided the destinies of the Orange wrestlers for many years in its infancy, and is responsible, probably more than any other one person, for the part this sport has played in Oregon State athletic history.

Between 1909 and 1927, when the Pacific Coast Conference ruled wrestling out of the major sport class, major letters were given to all those who participated in varsity meets, and between 1927 and 1936 the sport existed only as an independent part of the college athletic program. At that time Jim Dixon, '31, was successful in getting boxing and wrestling back on a minor sport basis where they are today.

Robin Reed, '25, was probably the most noted grappler to represent the college, and he continued to coach the Beaver teams after leaving college in 1925. In 1924 he won Olympic and national recognition. Reed wrestled in the 135-pound class in college and entered matches in which his opponents weighed as much as 175. He became undisputed welterweight champion of the world in 1924.

Until its exclusion from major recognition in 1927, Beaver wrestlers captured 14 Northern Division championships and in the final year, 1926, they won the national championships, when the National Wrestling Tournament was held in Corvallis.

The year 1938 again finds wrestling forging ahead in popularity with every indication that it will eclipse the popularity it enjoyed prior to 1927.

POLO

Organized in 1923, the Oregon State College polo team gained wide recognition on the Pacific Coast, and at one time was considered one of the most popular minor sports on the campus. Motorization of the field artillery unit in 1937, however, halted polo activities when army orders moved the mounts to other barracks.

With the exception of one year, 1935, when lack of funds caused a standstill in polo activities, letter awards were granted polo participants beginning back in 1926.

Coaches for the teams were officers stationed with the R.O.T.C. unit who coached the polo men in addition to their regular army duties. Since the sport was founded in 1923, seven different mentors have been assigned to this particular activity, among the most successful of whom was Major F. W. Bowley who had the longest and most successful reign beginning in 1930 and ending in 1934 after four active campaigns.

Other coaches in the order of their appearance were Captain G. S. Finley, 1924 and part of 1925; Lieutenant J. G. Christensen and Lieutenant H. M. Woodward, 1925 to 1927; Lieutenant L. M. Stockton, 1927 to 1930, when Major Bowley was assigned the responsibility of coaching the horsemen.

One-year coaches were Lieutenant F. A. Garrecht in 1935 and Captain R. A. Ellsworth in 1937.

GOLF

A comparatively new minor sport on the Oregon State campus is golf, which was organized in 1928. Before this time, however, the college had been represented by a golf team, but its participants received no recognition for their play.

The first tutor for the divot diggers was Tony Sotovia, formerly a professional player in Portland who coached the golfmen through three seasons. Along with other minor sports, however, the depression was felt by golf, and in 1931 only one match was played, and none was staged in 1932. The return of better times in 1933 again found the golfers active although they received no official recognition from the school in the way of awards.

With athletic finances again approaching normalcy in 1934, Ralph Coleman, '18, head of the department of intramural athletics, took over the coaching job, and continued in this capacity until the 1938 season when "Slats" Gill, basketball coach, was appointed to the position by the Athletic Board. The change in coaches was made to allow Coleman to assume the duties of head baseball coach.

Records show that Oregon State golf teams have won 23, lost 21, and tied two matches since minor sport recognition was given it in 1928.

TENNIS

B. T. Simms, until last year head of the department of veterinary medicine, is responsible probably more than any other person on the campus for the start given tennis at Oregon State, for it was he who guided this minor sport through its first 16 years of existence after its founding in 1921.

During his reign as tennis coach, Dr. Simms coached his teams to two seconds in the Northern Division and captured the championship in his last year, 1937, following which Bill McKalip, '31, freshman football coach, assumed the responsibility.

For many years all of O.S.C.'s tennis activities were confined to the limited court space in the west quadrangle directly in front of the Memorial Union Building, but with the construction of 14 new courts on the intramural field in 1937, tennis took a new lease on life and is gaining in popularity more than any other minor sport.

SWIMMING

The first time in the history of Oregon State in which the school was represented by a swimming team was in 1922 when a group of Beaver mermen competed in the Multnomah Club tank in Portland, finishing in third place, one place better than the University of Oregon, but headed by the Multnomah Club and the Portland Natatorium teams.

The same year, 1922, saw the Oregon State swimmers, competing in the first intercollegiate meet ever held in the state of Oregon, winning from the University of Oregon swimmers by the score of 49 to 19.

Swimming continued on a minor basis until 1933 and 1935 when lack of funds prohibited the school's having teams. Records show that during the years in which dual swim meets have been held with the University of Oregon swimmers, Oregon State has won 10, lost 12, and tied one.

Herb Eisenschmidt, '34, one of the outstanding swimmers to represent Oregon State in his college days, was appointed as coach in 1936 to replace Jack Hewitt, who had coached the sport since 1934. Hewitt is expected to return to the campus this year in the same position after having obtained an advanced degree in physical education at the university during his leave of absence.

Eisenschmidt's 1938 team was one of the best groups of swimmers ever to represent the school, and won the Northern Division championship by nosing out the University of Washington at Corvallis, 57 to 53.

CREW

When on October 13, 1927, the University of California presented the college with two rowing shells, crew as a sport made its debut at Oregon State. Organized first on an inter-class basis it has become one of the most popular minor sports with an increasing number of students participating each year.

Many Regattas Held

James C. Othus, a former member of the Cornell University rowing team, was the first crew coach at Oregon State, taking charge in 1927, the first year of the sport's existence. In 1932 E. A. Stevens, a member of the Cornell crew in 1908 and 1909, and coach of the Harvard University crew between 1923 and 1926, was appointed, and is credited with having done much to stimulate the interest in the sport among Oregon State men.

Because crew is a minor sport, competition with the larger universities and colleges on the coast is almost prohibitive, although once each year Coach Stevens takes his best class crew on a trip through California where meets are arranged with the University of California, U.C.L.A., and the Sacramento Junior College. In the Northwest, regattas are held with the University of Washington, the Portland Rowing Club, and the University of British Columbia. Besides these inter-school meets, regattas are held throughout the year between the various class crews.

Chapter 6--Intramural Athletics

OREGON STATE'S department of intramural athletics, recognized by many as the outstanding department of its kind in the nation, stands as a monument to Ralph O. Coleman, '18, who has been its director since 1929, following his return from Columbia University where he received his M.A.

Intramural athletics first became a part of the department of physical education in 1916 under Dr. A. D. Browne, and in 1919 Coleman reorganized the department set-up and developed it to the point where in 1929 he assumed the directorship.

So diversified are intramural sports that hardly a student leaves the Oregon State campus without participating in some manner in the intramural program. Every student who is identified in some way with a living group is permitted to choose from the many intramural sports one that is of particular interest to him.

"Every man at Oregon State in athletics" has been the goal of the intramural department for years, and the percentage of participation is fast approaching that goal. Many forms of activity are included in the program as shown by the pictures above. Softball, horseshoes and track fit in the spring schedule while touch football carries through the year. In the winter comes the variety of sports with exercise available in every form from wrestling to shuffling a deck of cards in the annual bridge tournament.

Among the many sports developed on the intramural program are speedball, volleyball, handball, touch football, baseball, swimming, tennis, boxing, wrestling, fencing, horseshoes, track, cross country, bridge, ping pong, basketball, foul throwing and golf.

If a student can't find a sport that suits him in that long list, he's almost a hopeless case, Director Coleman will declare. Judging from the gymnasium turn-outs during the winter months and the crowds on the many intramural fields during the spring, the program at Oregon State is one hundred per cent perfect. If that isn't proof enough one has only to look at the participation figures to be assured that everyone at Oregon State is intramural-minded. Living groups are partly responsible for the success of the program, for they have encouraged their members to participate.

Chapter 7-- Women's Athletics

Basketball for women started several years before the boys took up the cage sport at Oregon State. The group on the left, above, represented the college about 1900 and captured one of the many championships won by Beaver coeds. The two feminine athletes above are Fanny Getty and Leona Smith, members of the first team in 1898-1899.

Pictured at left and below are three women's sports at three different periods. Indian clubs were, perhaps, the first form of exercise used in women's classes at Oregon State. Racing and field hockey have long been popular although some interest has been lost as inter-school competition for women has been discouraged since 1922.

Addition of more events and elimination of superfluous clothes feature the changes between early athletics and the modern program for women, both being clearly demonstrated by a comparison of pictures on this and the previous page. Badminton has taken the campus by storm, and the girls now play a good game of softball. Creative dancing is fast gaining followers on the campus. Girls have had their own pool since 1927 when the Women's Building was completed. Volleyball, basketball and tennis are old sports with Beaver coeds, but fencing has only recently become popular. Clubs, honor societies and the Women's Athletic Association have brought added interest and added recreational opportunities.

Book 4

Organizations

THE STUDENT demand for organizations uniting them in common endeavor has appeared to be, from the very start, the result of a common desire for the social aspects of all organizations which forge acquaintance into friendship and lead to lasting memories of group experience. For the first twenty years the administration definitely frowned on such desires.

In 1889, however, they considered the values of organized extra-curricular work along literary lines and a committee was appointed to establish student societies for the pursuit of such work. Out of it came the Dialectic and Hesperian societies, replaced only three years later by the Websterians and Ciceronians for more efficiency.

When J. M. Bloss became president of the college in 1892, he brought definite ideas as to the importance of literary work. Much faculty attention was thereafter devoted to the two literary societies until in 1895 definite rules for further expansion were formulated. In two years, the men and women students each had organized three.

As early as 1897 the literary societies won the right for social activity with the adoption by the faculty of the resolution "provided, that on unanimous request of the members of any literary society, such society may be permitted to offer a short dancing program in addition to their literary exercises, if they have fulfilled all other requirements of the faculty regarding social entertainments."

With the increasingly liberal view toward the social side of student life, they subordinated that part of their purpose more important to the faculty. In the fall of '09, the recommendation of the Social Committee was "in order to encourage real literary work in the various literary societies of the College, the number of entertainments given by each—shall be limited to two for the College year except by special permission of the committee." Two years later the faculty chairman of the Committee on Student Organizations and Activities, reported that the literary societies, organized primarily for literary work were neglecting it for more and more activities of a purely social character.

But their importance to the students was already gone, for organizations of a purely social nature were beginning to appear. While the literary societies had grown to twelve in number, most of them were ready to change their purpose. In 1912, Philadelphian and Feronian united to found the present Mask and Dagger Club. They were the first mixed club, but, in their early days, preserved the favor of the faculty by keeping the men and women in separate sections. From ten in 1912, the literary societies dropped to three the next year and the social tendencies of the others were demonstrated most effectively by the Pierian Society, which became an outdoor club under the same name.

Last Ancestor Disappears

The Athenaeum and Utopian Societies carried on until 1915 and then vanished to leave the men of the Zetagathean alone for two more years before the last of the ancestors of the present generation left the scene. By that time there were already sixty offspring, covering all the organized student's desires. Eight national social fraternities for men and one for women had appeared, others were on the way through the two men's and four women's Greek locals and ten house clubs then existing. The half-dozen honor societies were still subordinated by the preponderance of professional clubs and societies. The student body, well organized, had been joined in 1916 by the Women's League, predecessor of the present Associated Women Students.

Social organizations replaced the literary societies in importance, and though much student attention was devoted to the work of many professional clubs in early days and honor societies in later years, they have never relinquished their position as topmost in the student mind. Their names alone account for more than half of the some 400 recorded.

The most recent faculty attack on their value to both members and the institution was directed in 1934 by President Peavy, particularly at honor and professional societies. Thoroughly familiar with the organizations and their work, after fifteen years as chairman of the Student Affairs Committee, his accusations were not unfounded and reverberations were heard on campuses and in national council chambers from coast to coast. Pointing out that national organizations take some $30,000 annually from the campus, mostly in initiation fees, he questioned their value to the institution and assailed public initiation proceedings and exorbitant initiation fees and dues.

Outlining a program which included the reduction of cost of maintenance to a minimum, indorsement and active cooperation of faculty, and existence for the college with the accomplishment of the claimed objectives, he appointed a faculty-student committee to govern their actions.

Since then, he feels, there has been considerable improvement where much was needed; but believes that there is much remaining to be accomplished. His attention may turn soon to the case presented by the social fraternities and sororities, whose national initiation fees average much higher.

In the Beginning

OMITTING the brief appearance of Alpha Tau Omega in 1882, Gamma Delta Phi, appearing in April, 1905, was the first Greek letter social organization on the campus. Kappa Sigma Nu, 1906, an organization in which athletes predominated, became the first local fraternity to operate along present lines. Women's Greeks did not begin to make their appearance until almost ten years after the men had led the way.

Organization Regulated

It was some time before the faculty saw any value in local, and particularly national, living organizations; but starting in 1915, when rigid regulations were laid down for their origin and control, and booming for five years beginning in 1917, the foundations of practically all of those existing at present were laid down. Though exceptions were made in some cases, most of the present houses went through a probationary period of at least one year as a club before they were recognized as a local, then another year before they were allowed to petition for admittance to a national. High standards of grades and conduct for both individuals and the group were required.

Depression Changes

In 1923 the faculty, already concerned with the preservation and control of the forty-nine locals and nationals then established, withheld recognition of new locals. Their fears were not unfounded, for in 1931 the high enrollment that had led to rapid organization was halved and by 1934 two sororities and seven fraternities had disbanded. The five women's and eighteen men's locals in 1923 all became nationals by 1931, contributing to a total of fifty-one in that year.

Chapter 1-- Sororities

Alpha Chi Omega

At the suggestion of Leona Kerr, '12, now Mrs. R. E. Shinn, and Gertrude Nolan, '11, eleven girls took the necessary steps toward bringing the first national sorority to the campus. As Alpha Omega in March, 1914, they were also the first local. ' ' At 8 Park Terrace from the Fall of 1915 until their present home was completed in 1926, they have maintained leadership in size, now numbering 330. ## Chapter 3--Independents

Creation of the Independent

THE INDEPENDENTS were created by the organization of the Greeks, for their mode of living in the halls of residence and throughout the town has undergone little variation since many years before fraternities and sororities became of importance. Since then they have been composed of men and women who have not become Greeks, for reasons usually of their own.

Establishment of Cooperatives

In 1935, with the enrollment again nearing the mark set some fifteen years earlier, the administration found the demand on the part of the overflow turning not to organized living groups as were represented by the comparatively expensive fraternities and sororities but to "batching," which costs less than the halls of residence. In the case of the men, this had never been a serious problem, but with women in increasing numbers facing part time work in homes if they were to stay, and the administration facing the difficulty of serving as parent to their scattered lives, the answer was attempted in the establishment of the first women's cooperative house.

All Represented

Nearing the end of a successful year, the first was named Jameson House by its inmates in appreciation of the efforts of the dean of women in their behalf. Two years later there were three such houses: Jameson, King's Road and The Pines, under the direct control and supervision of the college, and three recognized girls' boarding houses: Kinlani, Bauer and Lockwood, conducted in a similar manner. Each elect their own officers and are represented on the Independent Student council with Rosswood, Phrateres, Margaret Snell, Waldo, and the men's halls.

Margaret Snell Hall

In 1921 the present dormitory, first of three planned units, was opened for upperclass women. They were divided into four clubs, Acticon, Adelphean, Alcestis, and Ariadne until 1925 when the hall was opened to all classes and brought under one head. When the bottom dropped out of enrollment in 1933, it remained locked for two years. Rookesses now outnumber upperclassmen because of regulations requiring freshmen to live in the halls.

MARGARET SNELL HALL honors Dr. Margaret Comstock Snell who in 1889 inaugurated the first course of study in Home Economics.

Waldo Hall

With 53 charter members, Waldo Hall Club in some years has neared 300 members, their home claiming more alumnae than any other building. In 1921 the club divided into five minor units: Philion, L'Amitie, Wauna, Winema and P.E.P. The last gave way to the Xantippe Club in 1922, and L'Amitie and Wauna were both disbanded in 1926, the other three lasting five more years before the students again united as the girls of Waldo Hall.

WALDO HALL, completed in 1907, is named in honor of Dr. Clara Humason Waldo, regent of the college from 1905 to 1919.

Cauthorn

Poling

Weatherford Buxton Hawley

Associated Men's Halls

Cauthorn Club is the oldest of the five. Its present home, named in honor of Thomas E. Cauthorn, regent 1888-93, was not its first. In 1889 Senator Cauthorn carried a request to the legislature for funds to build the first men's dormitory. Occupied in 1891, it was governed by cadet officers until 1903. In 1908 the Cauthorn Club was formed and the hall became self-governing. Five years later the women students took over the hall, but the Cauthorn Club was carried on by a unanimous vote of the girls. When the new dormitory was built in 1928 and a wing named in honor of Senator Cauthorn, the old building was renamed Kidder Hall in honor of "Mother" Ida Kidder, librarian from 1908 until her death in 1920.

Poling Club was next in antiquity, originating in 1920 in barracks built by the S. A. T. C. on the site of the present building and kept by the college as a dormitory. The first and present hall was named in honor of Dr. D. V. Poling, Y. M. C. A. secretary here 1917-20.

The remaining three were born on completion of the new dormitory, made up of those men living in halls honoring James K. Weatherford, regent 1885-1929; Austin T. Buxton, regent 1905-09; and Curtis L. Hawley, regent 1909-23. All five dine together in the "MU" and are unified as the Associated Men's Halls.

Book 5

The Students' College

To recite a history of the growth of an institution from infancy, relating the objectives and efficiency of her administrators — to tell the story of her now great alumni body — to speak briefly of her great athletes and teams — to skim over the result of the human urge to organize among her students — somehow lacks completeness. Perhaps of interest to her living host of friends — there is yet the unbridged gap leading to the very heart of the memories of the thousands who have been her students.

As long as there has been the college — there have been students in attendance. Their life as undergraduates has always been vastly different from that they knew before matriculation and that they have known since commencement day. Few have left behind all thought of their years at Oregon State when they severed their last official connection with her as a student.

To expect that the pages necessary to recount the remembrances of each individual could be numbered — if each should submit his story — would be futile. It is hoped, however, that the chapters to follow will stir memories as much by omission as by actual content. A sincere attempt was made to include most of those items of student life and activity that have been the common experience of a great many students over long periods of time.

Students have had their own government since the turn of the century and with rapidly increasing ability in self-expression, their elected representatives have long held the respect of the administration of the institution. Not only are they useful to the students as a body in carrying the problems before the college administrators, but the situation is often reversed as the faculty seeks their aid in gaining student cooperation with institutional objectives.

Their official publications play a most vital part in the life of the institution. The Barometer and the Student Directory are indispensable to the efficient functioning of both faculty and student administration, and to the personnel of the college as a whole. The Beaver lays aside a permanent record of each passing year.

Adds to Student Life

This government of the students holds a more important spot in the life of the individual student than many realize. The politics involved in its continuance brings widespread interest each spring. All traditions and their enforcement spring somewhere from its rule, and many changes in the daily life of each student have been the result of its activity.

Time Alters Memories

All this has been present for less than 38 years, only half the life of Oregon State College. Those elements of student life which formed the basis of memories for students here before the college year became filled with student activities and events, social, athletic and traditional, still serve as a great portion of the present student's experiences. The very life — the student's 24-hour day — working, studying, playing, eating and sleeping, all these fade into unimportance in the hurried push of traditional weekends crowded with traditional events. And yet, as years roll by, student-created experiences fade or become exaggerated. But the old meeting and eating places, the home or homes, and the hated professors who, as mellowing time brings truth, join rank with the loved ones — all reside permanently in the reflecting mind.

Chapter 1-- Government

THE first attempts to organize the student body were the result of desired but faltering athletics. Since the first year of football in 1893, that sport fell farther behind financially each season. Yet it was already the most appealing of sports to the students.

Faculty authorities frowned on the poor management of athletics and were careful that the institution should not become involved in debts contracted by the students.

In 1896-97 the students resolved to put athletics on a firmer footing and formed an Athletic Association. They were not without supporters among the faculty and after investigation by the faculty athletic committee, they were granted permission to hold an athletic entertainment to bolster their own finances, and a dance at the Opera House to help reduce football debts, though they were refused permission to attend that dance.

At the end of the school year this petition was made on the behalf of the students: "In furtherance of the desire of the student body of the College expressed by a unanimous vote at a meeting of that body on May 6th, We the Athletic Committee of the Faculty report that it is their wish that an incidental fee of one dollar for each male student and fifty cents for each female student be assessed, to be used as a fund for the encouragement of oratorical contest work and general athletics, and we recommend that the Faculty ask the Board of Regents to authorize the collection of such a fee for such purpose at the matriculation of each student for his or her first term in each school year."

No action was taken on the petition, however, and a second attempt to add the costs of student athletics to the registration fee, so that it would be borne equally by all, took place in June, 1899. Early in that month a faculty motion that the Board of Regents be asked to require such a fee failed to pass. A week later a petition signed by 159 students was brought to the attention of the faculty. It repeated, in effect, the petition made two years earlier. After a stormy session, in which it was lost and reconsidered, a motion that it be referred to the regents was passed, and a similar resolution on the part of the faculty, framed by Professor Cordley, was also referred to the regents. All this evidently was to no avail, for the regents not only disapproved of support for student athletics, but for the school year 1900-01, they ordered them to cease entirely.

Oregon State has always recognized the value of student participation in activities and has encouraged the idea of student self-government. Student body presidents and the terms they have served are, left to right: Charles Horner, 1900-01; Arthur Tulley, 1901-02; Walter Dickey, 1902-03; Frederick Stimson, 1903-04; Bert Pilkington, 1904-05; Alfred Bradley, 1905-06; Warren Forsythe, 1906-07; Earl Harding, 1907-08; Torrey Austin, 1908-09; Robert Davidson, 1909-10; Lawrence Keene, 1910-11; Ernest Rice, 1911-12; Ralph Blanchard, 1912-13; Chester Dickey, 1913-14; and Roy Miller, 1914-15.

The fall of '99 found the more ambitious students facing the same disheartening prospects, but in this year they found leadership. Fred Walters, '00, captain of the football team, found ability in John Gallagher, '00, who was elected manager of the team. He launched a subscription drive which produced results. Typical of the responses he received was that of President Gatch. After inquiring as to Gallagher's policy he was assured that the football team would incur no obligations which it could not pay. A fifty dollar subscription then attested to the President's hearty approval of the manager's determination.

For that season H. C. Stickney was paid three hundred dollars as O.A.C.'s first full time paid coach, admission prices went up from twenty-five cents to half a dollar and the first special train was chartered to Eugene for the annual Thanksgiving day game with Oregon. The season ended with approximately seventy-five dollars in the balance and the way was paved for the first approval of student responsibility.

Gallagher and Walters again held a conference and decided to take action toward much needed efficiency. During Christmas vacation, Gallagher prepared a constitution and set of by-laws and in January, 1900, the plan was endorsed by a meeting of the students and the first student body organization was unanimously voted into being with subsequent faculty approval. The student body fee was set at $9.00 a year for new students, and $8.00 for those who had been in attendance. Charles H. Horner was elected as president for the ensuing year and became the first president of the Student Assembly, now known as the Associated Students of Oregon State College.

The enrollment totaled only 400 at that time, however, and there was yet no way to make membership in the student body 100 per cent. It was not until 1909 that financial support was assured. In that year a fee of $2.00 per term was approved.

The government of the Associated Students as it exists today did not come into existence until 1917, when the finances of athletics, the Barometer and the Beaver were all combined with the Associated Students and control centralized in the Board of Control.

*These men were also charged with the responsibility of heading student government on the Oregon State campus. This board went out of existence soon after the student fee — increased to $5.50 when the Barometer became a daily in 1923 — was abolished by the vote of the people of Oregon in 1935. With the Board of Control, a graduate manager to handle athletics was first attempted in 1918. Ted Cramer, assigned the task as his primary duty, was part-time alumni secretary also. It was "Jimmy" Richardson, holding the post from 1919 to 1922, who had time to organize the department, and Carl Lodell, 1922-37, who stayed longest. In 1937 Percy Locey was appointed Director of Intercollegiate Athletics as well as Director of Educational Activities, which function had been handled separately the previous year as an experiment.

Class government, athletic unity, the Barometer and the Beaver all had their origin before the formation of the student body proper. Classes, too, profited from the installation of a regular fee for their support.
Especially after the war when enrollment went high,
each had money, not only for the successful conduct of traditional events, but always for the purchase of a gift that would not otherwise grace the campus.
Their support was almost entirely taken away in 1935 and their struggle to meet expenses throughout their four years has already become a matter of concern in the institution.

The Barometer had an unusual beginning. It was at a faculty meeting on December 23, 1892, that Ellis Flett enlisted support in the initiating of an Agricultural Paper on the campus. The committee appointed to investigate returned on March 7 with no recommendations to make concerning the publication of an Agricultural Paper, but did wish to encourage an attempt to start a college paper to be conducted by members of the two literary societies then existent — the first number to appear in June.

On April 4, they offered the following concrete recommendations: "That * * * the first number appear on the Friday preceding Commencement week and that it be published quarterly thereafter. That the paper be edited by * * * three student editors selected one from each of the college Societies subject to the approval of the Faculty; that * * * the Faculty appoint a business manager * * * selected from the students; that no matter appear in the publication till it first shall have been approved by one of the members of the * * * committee."

Even the Barometer had a slow beginning, for it was not until 1895 that it appeared as such. The first editor was Frank Edwards, '96. The first Barometer was chiefly a literary magazine and was published monthly. In 1907 it became a weekly and as a medium of news and editorial comment on student body affairs it became more useful to the student body and institution. It changed to a college daily (five issues weekly) in 1923 and may be the first of the college papers on the coast to attempt a sixth edition on Sunday.

The Beaver, too, appeared as an "Annual" long before it began regular publication. In 1894 a group of students petitioned the faculty for the use of their pictures in the first annual. It reached print and was titled the "Hayseed" but had no successors until 1907, when the first "Orange" appeared. Until then the last issue of the Barometer each year was made a Souvenir Number and served as the annual. The Orange, later the Beaver, was published by the juniors until 1927, then absorbed by the Board of Control who gave it over to the supervision of the senior class.

The only political year of great importance was that of 1928-29, when political skull-duggery reached its height and in a closely run and hotly contested election race, the losing party asked for a recount. When it had been granted it was found that the ballots had been stolen. The result of that was an order by President Kerr for a re-election. The president of the student body remained the same, but the editorship of the Barometer changed hands. Up until then the editor of the Beaver had been selected by the senior class, and the managers for both publications appointed by the Board of Control. The upheaval of that year left its mark in the politics connected with publications, for a publications board was created by Dr. Kerr, and the selection of editors and managers of both the Beaver and Barometer passed permanently out of the hands of the student body.

Chapter 2-- Life

THE life of the student throughout the first thirty years of the institution was so closely regulated as to leave nothing for him but the humdrum habit of attendance and study. The enrollment was so small that the faculty, in frequent meeting, deliberated on all breaches of student regulations, including absences, and kept each student under close scrutiny.

The influence of the church came first, since the institution had evolved from a religious school. Discipline in academic and social behavior was based on a system of demerits, adopted September 10, 1873. Absence from recitation brought from 5 to 10 demerits; disorder at recitation, 5 to 50; late at recitation, 5 to 10; failure at recitation, 5 to 10; general disorder, 5 to 100; leaving recitation without excuse, 5 to 30; ladies and gentlemen conversing on college premises, 5 to 25. Only 100 demerits were cause for dismissal.

Periodical warfare was waged on the saloons and pool halls of the town by the faculty, usually the result of finding it necessary to discipline students for breaking "Remark 5" of the regulations: "The laws of the State forbid drunkenness, gambling, riotous conduct of any kind, attending a saloon; penalty for persistence — expulsion." The battle waxed particularly hot when the college authorities caught a minor in a saloon, for then the law was definitely on their side. President Arnold objected to this rule as provided by the state on the ground that it "punishes the student and lets the saloon keeper go free," the youth being the victim of "a trap which a vile man has set for him."

Presidents Finley and Arnold, though the student discipline they provided appears to have been extremely rigid, were definitely against the strictest enforcement. President Finley referred only one case requiring discipline to the Board of Regents, and students appear to have been forgiven rather easily during the administration of both presidents.

The first cadet uniforms were gray with caps of the Civil War type. The uniform was worn at all times, giving the campus the appearance of a military academy. The blue uniform seen in the first pictures were first worn in 1893. The Y.M.C.A. at the college was formed in 1892. It had a beneficial influence on the students and usually met on Sunday afternoons — sometimes at Cauthorn Hall.

During Arnold's administration labor on the college farms for one hour each day was compulsory and unpaid. Wage rate paid students for work in addition to that required went from as little as five cents an hour up to fifteen cents before 1900. Living costs were proportionately lower, however, the room and board bill in the nineties amounting to only $9.00. Cost per girl in Alpha Hall about that time was reported by Miss Snell as only $1.00 per week. About 1900, the board bills went up to $15.00 a month and the estimated expense per year for students was between $140 and $150.

In October, 1891, the study hours of the college were from 8 o'clock in the morning until noon; from 1 o'clock until 4 o'clock — and from 6 o'clock in the evening until 7 o'clock in the morning — "During which hours students are not allowed to be on the streets of Corvallis, or to be loitering or playing on the college grounds or elsewhere, without special permission."

Upon President Arnold's death, January 30, 1892, as evidence of the devotion both students and faculty held for him, everyone connected with the institution wore crepe for a period of thirty days. A plaque in his memory was later mounted in the hall outside the chapel by the alumni association.

With the arrival of President Bloss, student discipline relaxed for the first time, and the students of opposite sex were allowed to work and study together.

The attitude of the president is apparent in remarks made to the faculty at the beginning of his first school year, 1892-93. In the words of the faculty secretary, "During study hours boys and girls will hereafter be together, for the reason that in such a manner they can best be properly handled. (He) Deprecates scolding; does not think it best to suspect; but advocates forbearance with the mistakes and indiscretions of the young, and the cultivation of self-respect, avoidance of malicious satisfaction, and suggests such a line of policy in general, as will beget the greatest possible confidence of the student in the teacher."

President Gatch was the first to announce a deliberate policy of removing much of the paternalism that had prevailed in governing students. Soon after his arrival, in his report of 1898, he wrote "The clap-trap of what is usually called discipline — demerits, public reproofs, suspensions, expulsions — is often looked upon by students as a challenge to do wrong and the challenge is accepted accordingly. Espionage on the part of instructors casts a glamour over wrong doing on the part of students and tempts them to do evil. Numerous rules relating to the conduct of students have been stricken out during the past year and the students in response have shown a high appreciation of the faith reposed in them."

Dancing was not allowed until the late nineties and then the faculty, in ruling on entertainments given by the literary societies and classes, required that the entertainment be held on the college grounds and that it was not to consist exclusively of dancing. In 1897, the faculty committee on social entertainment recommended four dances each year and in general "any student body proposing to give a social entertainment of any kind shall notify the * * committee * * at least ten days previous to the date on which it is proposed to hold such entertainment and shall provide a program free from objectionable features, among which shall be included dancing and rough, boisterous and otherwise improper games."

Attention to hazing on the part of the faculty appeared for the first time in February, 1906, when it was "Resolved that any cadet found guilty of hazing shall immediately be dismissed from his company and expelled from College as guilty of a cowardly and dishonorable act."

In October, 1907, the faculty made arrangements to have a weekly chapel exercise on Wednesday instead of the daily chapel, and made attendance voluntary. This was the inauguration of the weekly Convocation, and was held first in the morning period beginning at 11:30 o'clock. That same month, the faculty granted a unanimous request on the part of the senior class that the custom of requiring each senior to deliver an oration be discontinued.

Above, left, the entire student body turns out to welcome the 1915 football team home from Michigan. Life at Oregon State in the 1920's must have been lots of fun, and seems to have consisted chiefly of swimming at the Mary's River dam; canoeing on the lower campus; hiking to Mary's Peak; throwing an occasional stag party and being a "clown" when it came time for initiation.

Student life came into its own shortly after 1900, and with the exception of the war period, struck and maintained a fairly high level. Hikes to the top of Mount Chintimini, now known as Mary's Peak, gained early popularity. Canoeing was not slow in finding favor, and at one time students surreptitiously took Southern Pacific handcars to take their dates riding out to Philomath.

Popular places to meet, eat, or both, have been variously known as Joe's, Mother Sullivan's Place, A's and K's (Wagner's), Kajazz's, the Trysting Tree, the old Whale Bone, the Lily, the Eureka, Electric Lunch, Eiler's, Milly's and the "Brass Duck." Stidd's, popular eating spot in the pre-war days, were the sponsors of the traditional senior tables, most of which have now been moved to the Memorial Union Building.

The social life of the students has never been what might be called natural. Living together as in a closely united community with their own government, laws, and ruling bodies; enjoying more and more the responsibilities and status of adulthood as the years roll by, there is yet the fact that all are youths, averaging little more than 20 years young, and the added complications that there are almost twice as many men as women in attendance. However, memories of alumni, young and old, indicate that life in the institution has always been enjoyable and in the opinion of some of the oldest, it has not changed a great deal, generally speaking.

Mary's River, lower, left, was, before the advent of student-owned cars, a favorite haunt of students. However, the beach was also a popular place for those who wanted to get away. Women students built a retreat of their own. A football victory over Oregon always provides an excuse for a pep rally. Freshman students have always been bothered with entrance examinations.

While the tempo of student life may have speeded up somewhat in keeping with the times, the 1938 college student is much the same as his predecessors in the 1890's. These photos show life at O.S.C. as it is today with rally dances in the M. U., registration, fussing, club parties, special rally trains, and gossiping providing the principal means of recreation and relaxation.

Chapter 3--Traditions

TRADITIONS had no place in the institution until after 1900 when class and other organized activity set precedents good and bad, which were followed by their successors. Few have been the traditions that have taken place annually over long periods. Many so-called traditions are revivals of events held at Oregon State years before or imitations of traditions popular on other campuses.

The oldest and most constant of present traditions outdates all others at least ten years and came in with the popularity of cigarettes among the student men. On January 27, 1890, the faculty passed a resolution that no students be allowed to smoke in the college buildings or on the college grounds. A year and a half later, they sought the support of the Board of Regents with this notation of the faculty secretary, "Observations exchanged among the members of the faculty concerning the increasing popularity among students of the dried leaves of the plant known as 'Nicotiana tabacuni' culminate in the following resolution: Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to confer with the Executive Committee of the

O.S.C. has long taken pride in her traditions, and while throughout the years of her growth some have fallen by the way, many which were established during the early years of the school's history still remain today. Above, right, two senior women repose on the Senior Bench on the Lower Campus.

One of the early traditions that went out of existence with the advent of the automobile was the Senior Hay-rack ride which was an annual event in the spring. Below, left, the senior class of 1909 on the last hay-rack ride taken at Oregon State.

Many of the traditions of the early days centered about the classes, and during the early 1900's interclass rivalry ran high. At right are photos of the interclass cross-country race in 1909; the special rooting section of the class of 1910 at one of the football games, and the class football championship game of 1909 in which the juniors and sophomores fought it out for the school championship in a howling blizzard.

Below, a boarding house for girls, razed when Waldo Hall was built on the same spot in 1907. Board of Regents concerning prohibiting students from using the noxious weed on the College-premises."

On May 2, 1893, the faculty again led the way. On motion "Orange" was adopted as the College color. Students immediately adopted black as a background for their color and thereby gave rise to a dispute that cropped out thirty-five years later. Albany College, only eleven miles distant, which had selected orange and black for her colors in 1887, had objected when Oregon State considered the combination officially in 1893, and in 1928 protested that the combination had been given semi-official sanction on the Orange campus. Beyond power to change at present, newspapers, students, alumni and even this book have used the double color.

For some time, from 1890 until 1905, Hallowe'en

had been the excuse for releasing much of the pent-up spirit harbored throughout the year. All sorts of pranks were played on the instructors by their students. One of the most famous, perhaps, is the morning the faculty and students found that Dean Covell's cow had somehow beaten them to chapel.

After 1900, this energy began to translate itself in terms of class rivalry. This had taken such a strenuous form by 1906 that the faculty required "That the young men of the sophomore class and others acting with them who may be designated by the President be required to sign the following statement before Tuesday evening next or stand suspended. 'We claim that our class has the right 'peaceably to assemble' and we accede to the proposition that other classes have the same right; therefore we will not molest them in their meetings and we will use our influence to prevent other members of our class from interfering with these meetings. This promise we will faithfully keep.'"

Oregon State's oldest and probably strongest tradition is the athletic rivalry with the University of Oregon. Above, a group of several hundred rooters serpentine between halves of the U. of O. game in 1911. Serpentine at present day football games are rare.

Many of the early traditions involved the staging of pageants each spring. At left are some of the pictures taken of the May day pageants on the lower campus in 1910.

Above, a group of industrious freshmen erase green and yellow paint from the dedication plaque on the Armory. Lower, members of the Vigilance Committee on dress parade. This group was responsible for the punishment of misbehaved freshmen.

These were the "naughty" sixes, sevens, eights and nines, and their class numerals were painted and fought over on the tower of the administration building, the water tower and other points of vantage. Inter-class sports were promoted to help relieve the tension, and proved all the rage up until the war. Typical class uniforms were those of the "naughty nines." As sophomores they wore red sweaters with white numerals, white pants, blue sox and black shoes. Their hats were derbies with the midsections cut out so that the tops rested snugly on the head, and were painted with their numerals, skull and crossbones or other insignia. In those days the sophomores were the only ones to wear class clothing since the rooks were not allowed any sign of distinction whatever and the upperclassmen were too "dignified."

Professor Angell of the department of physical education submitted the first definite plan to destroy Initiations and hazing, as shown in the photos at the right, made up many of the traditions at Oregon State during the early 1920's. Upper, right, another picture of the Vigilance Committee taken at their annual initiation.

Freshman-Sophomore hates in one day. His recommendation for the first Rook-Soph "bag-picnic" was approved by the faculty on November 3, 1909.

In 1903, the class of '09 held the first Junior Flunk

DR. J. R. N. BELL, for whom Bell Field is named, celebrated every O.S.C. football victory over the University of Oregon by throwing his hat into Mary's River. Above, he is shown with Dr. Kerr as the entire student body turned out to witness the ceremony.

The Senior Bench which stood by the Co-op Book Store on Jefferson Street, near the Armory, was the gathering place for seniors during each spring term.

day, when silently and without word the girls packed picnic baskets and the entire class stole out of town, skipping classes and other activities. This tradition rapidly degenerated as the seniors began to raid the picnic supplies of the juniors and, failing, to leave school when it became apparent that the juniors had gone, hunt them up and fight a royal battle over the spoils. In about the same year the first senior excursion to Newport was held, the class traveling by train and boat to the coast near Newport. That also vanished with the building of good roads to coastal points, though in some years the seniors have embarked by boat for excursions on the Willamette.

Canoeing has always been very popular among students and for several years a canoe fete was held in which fraternities and sororities, jointly or alone, decorated canoes and rafts in flowers and competed for a prize. Restrictions on the use of canoes, and requirements for tests on swimming and canoeing

Another of the traditions which is not observed today is the annual canoe fete which was held for many years on Mary's River near the Corvallis Auto Park. This fete was one of the most colorful events held on the campus.

Another campus tradition which was dropped a few years ago was the annual Military Tournament. Staged by the students of the R.O.T.C., this show was given on Bell Field and provided many thrills to exceedingly large audiences. It has been replaced with the Horse Show which is held each year in the Armory.

ability, forced the change to the present water program on Campus week-end.

One of the oldest of present formal dances in the light of tradition is the Junior Prom. It was given official sanction by the faculty as the Junior Hop in 1897. Next oldest is the Military Ball, staged by Scabbard and Blade at present. In line would be the Senior Ball, Sophomore Cotillion, Freshman dance, Mortar Board or Women's Ball, and youngest, the All-School Formal.

Below, more scenes of the Military Tournament on Bell Field in which participants were awarded prizes for the best horsemanship.

Traditions which still exist today are, above, the collection of refuse and materials for the annual Rook Bonfire, and below, the Rook-Sophomore bag rush, which provides plenty of action between the two lower classes.

Present traditions in good standing also include Homecoming, with its Rook bonfire, which started in the early twenties. House signs are old on Homecoming week-end, the noise parade has replaced the once held night pajama parade, and the midnight matinee remains the youngest addition.

Spring term is filled with tradition, Campus week-end packing in most of them. Here has been revived the bag-rush. Canoe tilting and crew races replace the old canoe fete as water events, and the tug-of-war between the sophomores and freshmen with the subsequent war on the banks of the millrace are perhaps the oldest elements. The Junior Breakfast, outdoor convo and campus luncheon are all highlights, and the spasmodic Junior Follies is the only college all-men's musical show west of the Mississippi when it is produced. On this week-end, classes move up, freshmen burn their green lids and ribbons, and sophomores wear cords for the first time.

More traditions which are still found at Oregon State today are the Burning of the Green and the annual Rook-Sophomore tug-of-war. Left, the sophomores pull the rooks into the river in the annual fracas in 1920, and above, the last rook lid goes into the fire.

For odds and ends and general present traditions, athletic events are non-fussing. The Alma Mater is always played and sung after each football game and students are supposed to wait for it, all Beavers rise in respect and men remove their hats while it is sung. Rooks wear their green lids all the time when outside, and rookesses wear their green ribbons only on days of convocations (compulsory for freshmen). The seniors have their bust and table top.

Enforcement of traditions has finally drifted into the hands of the Associated Students, a body of which most rooks and rookesses are members. Talons retain a high degree of efficiency in their enforcement of traditions among freshmen women, but Thaners, the present organization of upperclass men has little more power than the Beaver Knights held in their last few years. Neither Thaners nor the Beaver Knights have ever reached the bloody heights that distinguished the Vigilance Committee in both treatment of the rooks and in their own initiations — finally bringing its banishment as an organization. Up until after the close of the World War the sophomores as a class had taken it upon themselves to keep the freshmen in line, but found in the committee the group to replace their unwieldiness.

Students of today carry on the traditions of the past. The freshman class display numerals at annual dance; the band leads the parade to Eugene for the game Saturday but was not along when the students returned Monday to celebrate. Homecoming features a midnight matinee, the bonfire and a football queen. Sophomores have the Wis-kerino and queens also grace the All-School Formal and the Junior Prom.

The R.O.T.C. cadet band is the oldest organization on the campus and has become a tradition among traditions. Students faced opposition when they pe-tioned for permission to organize a brass band in November of 1890. Permission was granted with the provision that they procure their own instruments, engage an instructor at their own expense, and practice only at such times as would not interfere with their regular work. They were not to disturb any college officer, or any of their fellow students by practicing at unreasonable hours. Against these odds, they soon rose to a place where they were hired by the college to replace the Corvallis Brass Band at commencements.

Captain Beard, who played in the band as a student, and their instructor-leader since 1905, has become a tradition in himself. He has led 27 band concert tours through the state since 1905, missing only a few during depression years.

Campus week-end is without doubt the outstanding event of the spring term. The ever-present bag rush and tug-of-war meet the same enthusiasm today that they did 25 years ago. A new twist to the annual struggle was added this year when fire hoses were supplied to each class. Water sports on Mary's River and the Willamette entertain students and visitors Saturday morning before the luncheon on the lower campus. Incidentally a few black eyes result when the two underclasses attempt to climb the greased pole to fly their class flags.

Almanac and Index

IN the five preceding books, it was found that the presentation in story form of the subjects undertaken left little space for the inclusion of the many dates and names involved. In the almanac section to follow, much of the lacking information is supplied.

Composed of the names of students and administrative officers, together with the terms they served; the name of every student organization that has received recognition in the pages of the annuals, with the length of existence of each; the records of the most important athletic events that have been the result of intercollegiate rivalry; and the names of all those who have supported the Orange and Black campaign — it will be found a history in itself. With the appearance of a dictionary, and without a single picture, it still will retell, in the most condensed form possible, all the multitude of stories that have been the foundation of its facts. Of value to those who may seek factual information concerning the college, it will be of interest to a host of others in renewing and substantiating their memories.

The culmination of a sincere effort on the part of the Alumni Association to concentrate all important factual information on the college, has resulted in a compilation which can be found more complete than in the pages of the Orange and Black in only one place — the Memorial Union office of the Alumni Association. In the gathering of information for this section, the Association purposely sought more material than the Orange and Black could carry. And at the close of that search, the Orange and Black not only became a published authority on the State College, but the office of the Association also became the center of factual information on the campus. Where they do not have information, they will know where to find it. And where the records contained in the Almanac are lacking in completeness, the compilers cannot be blamed for lack of effort. From the very beginning it has been the hope that each set of records should be complete, and additions toward fulfilling that aim will be welcomed even after distribution of the Orange and Black.

Appreciation and Acknowledgement

AS the work involved in the publication of this volume began to take on its full proportions, assistance was sought from many sources. The completeness of the Orange and Black, which in the one year of its production has covered seventy, serves as credit to the cooperation and willing aid of the many who responded.

Special credit is due the Portland Printing House, Inc., Robinson-Morris, Hicks-Chatten and Beaver Engraving Companies for their efficient and helpful handling of the extremely difficult copy represented in the book. The efforts and advice of Walter Schultz and Hugh Stevenson of the Portland Printing House was especially appreciated.

The editorial staff of the book has included both students and alumni. Allan Rinehart, Warren Reid and Eunice Courtright among the alumni have been most generous in their donation of valuable time to editorial advice and assistance. Of the students, Lois Williams, assistant editor, was invaluable in research activity; Ed Burchell offered timely aid, and Lavelle Hanna, Phoebe Bosworth Hocken, Ellean Hoover and Carlyn Hill have been consistent, conscientious workers.

Contributors to the Orange and Black have been many. Students, faculty members and alumni on and off the campus complied with many requests for information involving time and labor. Outstanding have been E. T. Reed, editor of college publications; Miss Courtright, alumni records clerk, and Bud Forrester, athletic news director, who are the authors of the first three books.
