Franklin Delano Roosevelt

Memorial Address
DELIVERED BEFORE THE JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS AS A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT to the LATE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

BY
Hon. John Gilbert Winant

Hall of the House of Representatives

July 1, 1946
By the President of the United States of America

A Proclamation

To the People of the United States:

It has pleased God in His infinite wisdom to take from us the immortal spirit of the Thirty-second President of the United States.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt

The leader of his people in a great war, he lived to see the assurance of the victory but not to share it. He lived to see the first foundations of the free and peaceful world to which his life was dedicated, but not to enter on that world himself.

His fellow countrymen will sorely miss his fortitude and faith and courage in the time to come.

The peoples of the earth who love the ways of freedom and of hope will mourn for him.

But though his voice is silent, his courage is not spent, his faith is not extinguished. The courage of great men outlives them to become the courage of their people and the peoples of the world. It lives beyond them and upholds their purposes and brings their hopes to pass.

Now, therefore, I, Harry S. Truman, President of the United States of America, do appoint Saturday next, April 14th, the day of the funeral service for the dead President, as a day of mourning and prayer throughout the United States. I earnestly recommend the people to assemble on that day in their respective places of divine worship, there to bow down in submission to the will of Almighty God and to pay out of full hearts their homage of love and reverence to the memory the great and good man whose death they mourn.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, the 13th day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and forty-five, and of the independence of the United States, the one hundred and sixty-ninth.

By the President:

EDW. R. STETTINIUS, Jr.,
Secretary of State.

Adopted July 13, 1946.
Memorial Address
by
Hon. John Gilbert Winant
United States Representative on the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations
Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, and distinguished guests, it has been the custom of the Congress to set aside a day for appropriate exercises in commemoration of the life, character, and public services of Presidents of the United States who have died. This day has, therefore, been set aside in memory of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, thirty-second President, who took office at the gravest moment of an economic crisis which threatened the security of the Republic, who twice preserved his country, was three times reelected to its Presidency, and died in office in his country's greatest war, having lived to see the victory assured but not to share it.

The final estimate of Franklin Roosevelt's achievement will not be made by us or in this room. It will be made elsewhere, and later, and by men who will judge all of us, not him alone. What Lincoln's message of December '62 said of his listeners in this same House is true of us:

We cannot escape history. We of this Congress and this administration will be remembered in spite of ourselves. No personal significance or insignificance can spare one or another of us. The fiery trial through which we pass will light us down in honor or dishonor to the latest generation.

But though we cannot pay the final tribute which time reserves to others, we can do what later generations may not do. We can speak of Franklin Roosevelt as a living man. All of us in this room, or almost all, are men and women who knew him—men, for the most part, who served with him in government in this country’s greatest war. Some of us loved him well. Some of us opposed him earnestly. Many in this room bore responsibility at his request; sat in council with him. There is not one of us here who did not watch him near or at a distance, privately or publicly, in the great trial which was his life.

Greatness in a man, as in a mountain, requires distance to be seen. The things a man has lived by take their place beside his actions in the true perspective of time, and the inner pattern of his life becomes apparent. In the long range, it is the things by which we live that are important, although the timing and circumstance play their part. This was true in the life of Franklin Roosevelt. He might have been speaking of himself, as well as of the country, when he said:

To some generations much is given; of some generations much is expected. This generation has a rendezvous with destiny.

He played a great part in great events. He was his country’s President and undisputed leader at a great and decisive moment in its history. Under his Presidency, the Republic reached the position of principal importance and power among the nations of the earth which it now holds. It may be, indeed, though God forbid, that the power to which the Republic then reached was the high power of its destiny: only we, the living, can determine whether that be so.

These are the facts of history which no man disputes. But greatness does not lie in the association—even the dominating association—with great events. Events have an impersonal inertia of their own and a nation is something other than the purpose of its officers of state. Greatness lies in the man and not the times; the times reflect it only. Greatness lies in the proportion.

In Franklin Roosevelt the qualities we knew were these—we who worked with him and watched him. He loved mankind. There was no one in public life in our time who had the confidence of a greater part of the people of the earth than Franklin Roosevelt. He had their confidence not only because he believed in them as men and women, but because he expected much of them as men and women. The world to him was not composed of nations only, nor the nations of classes. He did not believe in abstractions. He believed in individual human beings. The compact, as Walt Whitman put it, was always with individuals. The decisions, whether in war or in peace, were decisions which affected the lives of individuals. The friendships, the dissensions, the agreements were individual friendships, individual dissensions, individual agreements. He loved men, but he loved them to be free, to be themselves.

He was brave. There is no man in this room—not those who saw him in the weakest moments of a frightful illness—not those who saw him in the most terrible moments of the war—there is not one of us who can say that he saw Franklin Roosevelt afraid.

He was steadfast. Once the decision had been made, he stood to it. Strong-willed and stubborn of purpose, he chose the men and framed the plans to bring to bear upon his country's enemies the full and overwhelming power of its strength, turning the first and terrible defeats to victories unprecedented in the history of war. Those who know of their own knowledge what risks he had to take, what burden of responsibility he had to bear, know how to estimate his steadfastness.

He saw the facts and faced them. Even in the brief perspective of a year we have learned how well he saw the facts of danger to his country. At a time when few men other than he, whether in positions of responsibility or not, understood the meaning of the history of our time, he understood it. We know now from the mouths and records of our enemies how well he understood. At a time when it was intellectually unpopular and politically dangerous to face the facts, he faced them. Neither the initial indifference of many among our people upon whose understanding he must have counted, nor a campaign of personal vilification in certain sections of our press, rarely equaled in any country, deterred him. He carried the distasteful burden of an unpopular awakening and brought the people, not of his own country only, but of the democratic world, to see their danger while yet there was time—how little time—to save themselves and save the world they lived in.

He dared to act. It is not always that those who have the courage to see have the courage to act on what they see. Franklin Roosevelt acted. In two great crises, one within, the other without, his acts changed history. That the confidence of the American people in themselves and in their Nation was restored and strengthened by the vigor and decisiveness of his action of 1933, all of us here know, for many have shared in that action and remember well. That Britain was saved to fight the war through by the courage and decisiveness of his action of 1940 we know also. None of us who knew of that decision and its consequences can forget it now that the war is won.

He believed. There was no American of his time who believed more deeply in America than he, and no believer in democracy who had a firmer faith in man. Freedom to him was not a word but a reality; not a sentiment to which men might aspire, but a reality they might possess. The reaffirmations of the rights of man to which he committed his administration and his country in the domestic and the foreign crises of his years as President were reaffirmations not of word but fact. They stand with the great charters of mankind.

And finally, and most important of all perhaps for us who have outlived him, he dared to hope. There was never a time in the dark years of the depression, of the black years of the war, when he lost hope. And as the end of the war drew near, and the end of his life with it, his hope grew greater, grew beyond the war, beyond the victory to peace. He dared to hope for peace, to believe in peace, and to act for peace.
Young in heart himself, he always thought of his country as young also, as the New World, as the builder of new worlds of peace. Believer in man, and believer therefore in men, he thought of this Republic of ours as part of that greater republic of mankind on which alone a true peace can be rested. He never thought the labor would be easy. He never questioned—he least of all men—that differences and difficulties would arise. But neither did he cease to hope. Nor would he now.
These then were his qualities as President and foremost citizen of the United States. Brave, steadfast, one who dared to see the facts, to face them, and to act; one who believed, who hoped. Whatever verdict history writes down; this much we know who knew him—that he was a man. God give us heart and will to take this Nation as he left it—not only powerful, not only rich but young and hopeful and confident and believing and strong—God give us heart and will to take this Nation forward as he meant to take it to a new, more daring future, a new world of peace.

INVOCATION

(There followed a moment of devotional silence.)

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy holy spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee, and worthily magnify Thy holy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

O Thou who are the Father of us all, in whose sight a thousand years are but as yesterday, we ponder the strange tidings of destiny, in which are mingled joy and sorrow. We pray fervent-ently that Thy spirit may possess our souls so that no selfish passion may hinder us from knowing Thy will and no weakness from doing it.

Today we are assembled to give tribute and honor to him who strove to create a new era of brotherhood for our country and the races of earth. His was the sympathetic heart and open mind for those who are scourged by the ills of misfortune and affliction. For him the winds did not speak more swiftly to the giant oak than to the humblest human flower by the wayside. As we contemplate the humane purpose in the life of Thy servant, grant that we, renewed and cheered, may turn to our particular tasks and ever stand for the maintenance of spiritual integrity of our land; and walking with Thee, may find the ways of peace and concord. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Mr. Robert Merrill sang Eternal Father, Strong to Save, a favorite hymn of the late President Roosevelt.

The Speaker. The joint committee of the Congress has invited the Honorable John Gilbert Winant, a close friend of the late President, our former Ambassador to Great Britain, and now the United States representative on the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, to deliver the address on this occasion. It is my privilege to present Mr.
Winant.

Mr. Winant delivered the memorial address.

PRAYER AND BLESSING

The Reverend Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., Chaplain of the United States Senate, offered the following prayer and benediction:

God of the living and of the living dead, in a realm where beyond these voices and party cries there is peace and a pure plane of appraisal where the motives and deeds of men are weighed in juster scales than ours, and where the souls of the righteous are in Thy hands and belong to the undivided nation forever:

We thank Thee for the life of this servant of Thine and of humanity who led the Republic in the days of its most crucial test and that for the world’s fairest hopes he was a word made flesh in a torn and tormented generation. We give Thee thanks that while others slept Thou didst give him to see clearly that the vital issue was a slave world or a free world, and that Thou didst anoint him to make our America the arsenal of democracy’s weapons for imperiled freedom everywhere.

Now that that foul tyranny is in dust and ashes we come to acknowledge in this Chamber, where with failing physical strength and faltering voice he gave a last account of his stewardship, that among the shining memories of the Nation he served will abide always the heritage of his personal courage, his utter faith in democracy, and his passion to uplift the underprivileged and the exploited everywhere.

We think tenderly today of his heroic triumph over bodily affliction and disability, a precious gift he has bequeathed to all who with maimed bodies have returned from the carnage to face the test he surmounted in the art of living. This memorial hour we would listen to his parting words, his marching orders, as Commander in Chief, as, being dead, he yet speaketh:

Let us move forward with a strong and active faith, remembering that the only limit to our realization of tomorrow is our doubts of today.

We are grateful that in Thy providence before he ceased at once to live and to work he knew that triumph was perching on Allied banners, and that every white cross on far-stretching God's acres under alien skies was a belfry for the chimes of victory.

And now, under the spell of his example, with the elixir of his winged words still ours, we pray that when for us all the voices that praise or blame grow faint and drift away, Thou wilt give us to know that Thy everlasting arms are still there beneath us. At the last, when the fever of life here is over, bring us all to the homeland of Thy eternal love. In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will, working in you that which is well pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen.

The Speaker. The joint session of the two Houses is now dissolved.

The President and his Cabinet, Mr. Winant, the members of the late President Roosevelt's Cabinet, the Diplomatic Corps, Mrs. Roosevelt and members of the late President Roosevelt's family, the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the governors of States and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Chief of Staff to the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, the Chief of Staff of the Army, the commanding general of the Army Ground Forces, the
FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

Chief of Naval Operations, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, the Commandant of the Coast Guard, the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Members of the Senate retired.

Thereupon, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., the joint session of the two Houses was dissolved.

Proceedings in the Senate

FRIDAY, April 13, 1945.

The Senate met in executive session at 12 o’clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Reverend Hunter M. Lewis, B. D., associate minister, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Almighty God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, Author of life and Lord of death: We bow our heads in silent grief that it hast pleased Thee to call unto Thyself the soul of Thy servant, Franklin, into whose hands Thou hadst placed the leadership of our Nation.

For his stainless character, the richness of his intellect, and his unremitting service to his country in time of sorest need, we yield Thee humble thanks, O Lord, beseeching Thee to help us to pray “Thy will be done.” Lord, vouchsafe him light and rest, joy and consolation in Thy presence, in the ample folds of Thy great love.

Comfort, we beseech Thee, his loved ones in their sorrow. Remember them, O Lord, in mercy; endue their souls with patience, and give them grace to know that neither death nor life can separate them from loved ones who are with Thee.

O God of our salvation, in the midst of sudden perplexity, may we find Thy peace. Grant to the President of our Nation special gifts of wisdom and understanding, of counsel and strength. Dispel for us all the night of doubt and fear, and lighten our darkness as we go forward in Thy name, until at length we, too, may hear Thy voice, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Mr. Barkley. Mr. President, while the Senate has not yet received, according to custom, official notice of the death of the President of the United States, I am sure that all of us who assemble here this morning assemble with heavy hearts and with depressed spirits. We assemble, Mr. President, in the midst of grief, not only on the part of our official body, not only on the part of the Congress, not only on the part of the American people, but we assemble amid that grief and contrition of spirit that pervades the entire world at this hour.

It is given to few men to occupy the Chief Magistracy of this great Nation of ours, which was conceived in liberty and dedicated, as Lincoln said, to the proposition that all men are created equal; not equal in physical power, not equal in intellectual endowments, not equal either in moral fiber, but without regard to differences—physical, moral, or intellectual—without regard to differences of race, color, or religion, are born equal in the right and opportunity to enjoy the blessings of freedom under a Nation and under laws and under a system which undertakes, so far as human institutions can do so, to guarantee the equal enjoyment of every right which a government ought to guarantee to those who support and defend it. It is, therefore, given to few men to attain this high distinction as the head of a nation so dedicated and so conceived, but it is a rarer thing for fate and destiny to call to supreme leadership in the world any man born of woman. Franklin D. Roosevelt enjoyed that high distinction.

We do not honor him today merely because the American people allowed him to shatter precedent; we do not honor him merely because he, through the interposition of destiny, became a world leader; we honor him today because also of his personal qualities—of his moral and intellectual stature; we honor him as an American; we honor him as a citizen of the world in the true sense, and we rejoice to honor him in that capacity because wherever men long for liberty, wherever they fight for the enjoyment of human rights, wherever they shed their blood today or tomorrow, or lay down their lives in order that a great ideal may be attained, his name is and will be cherished and revered around the world and throughout all the ages.

Born to affluence, in which so many seek repose and enjoyment, he was unwilling to live the life of the idle. Early in life he espoused the cause of the common man and the common woman. Early in life he dedicated his abilities which in many respects were so amazing, to the cause of those who are inarticulate, those whose names never appear in the columns of the press, those about whom books are never written, those who dwell in the shadows rather than on the peaks of human existence, those who dwell in the shadows where the sun rarely penetrates to shed that light of intellectual and moral superiority which ought to be, and is, the ambition of every normal human being.

Franklin D. Roosevelt spurned the idleness, spurned the listlessness, spurned the repose which might have been his for the asking, in order that he might become here, and as an agency of fate throughout the world, the symbol and the spokesman of all those who hope for a better life and for a better world.

Stricken down in early life by an affliction which might also have caused him, with justification, to look forward to a life of inactivity and of comfortable ease, so far as man may be said to have ease and comfort when stricken by a physical malady from which he never wholly recovers, he was unwilling to assume the posture of inactivity or of repose, because in that body of his, stricken as it was by this affliction, there was an indomitable spirit, there was a moral and intellectual strength which would not permit him, in this great world of opportunity, to spend the remainder of his life as many others would have been induced to spend it under such an overwhelming handicap.

We honor him today, Mr. President, not only because earlier he overcame what might have been a logical and natural tendency, and later overcame physical handicaps the equal of which no man in his station had ever encountered in this or any other nation, we honor him today, as we have honored him in the years gone by, because he conquered overwhelming burdens and hardships, because his moral and spiritual make-up enabled him to overcome physical handicaps, because in his case mind was supreme over matter, by reason of which he became, in my judgment, the world’s greatest leader while he occupied the station of leadership.

He had great qualities, Mr. President, but he did not possess those great qualities without great faults, for God has not so designed life that men may be without faults, however great may be their intellectual and moral qualities. All great men have been possessed of faults, as well as high and noble qualities. Washington had them, Jefferson had them, Lincoln had them, Woodrow Wilson had them, Franklin D. Roosevelt had them. But in the magnitude of Franklin Roosevelt’s performance, in the magnitude of his accomplishment, in the magnitude of his influence, in the magnitude of the reverence and respect and almost adoration in which he has been held throughout the world, faults are swallowed up, and will be swallowed up when the impartial historian shall write the record not only of this man, but of the time in which he lived. Faults will be swallowed up in the affirmative record of virtues and great success, like death itself is swallowed up in victory.

It was my good fortune to be intimately acquainted with the President. I had known him as Assistant Secretary of the Navy in the administration of Woodrow Wilson. I had known and seen him at national conventions of his political party. I had seen him at San Francisco in 1920 when he was nominated for Vice President. I had seen him in New York in 1924 as he came out upon the platform to place in nomination for the high office which he afterwards held with such distinction, and from which he has just departed, that Happy Warrior who preceded him to the grave by only a few months. I saw him again at Houston, Tex., 4 years later, when, somewhat improved from the physical illness from which he suffered in 1924, he again placed the same man in nomination for this high office. I saw him fly to Chicago in 1932, taking no note of danger, taking no note of chance, but coming there to inspire those who had honored him with the nomination which led to his election to a great office. I had seen much more of him during the last 12 years, in which, by reason of my official position, I came in constant contact with him.

I did not always agree with the President about everything. In almost every case when we had divergent views we discussed them in the utmost frankness and candor, and nearly always came to an agreement about the policy which should be adopted. But when we now and then may have disagreed, either as to policy or principle, we did so with a recognition of the sincerity of each other, of the right of each to entertain and retain and to fight for the things in which we believed. We did so with that utmost respect which I always held for him, and that affection with which I looked upon him as a person and as a President of the United States. I always had the satisfaction of feeling that I also enjoyed his respect and his affection, and he gave me assurance of both on innumerable occasions.

Mr. President, I should be utterly insincere and ungrateful if I did not here acknowledge before my colleagues and before my country that I entertained for the President, and for all he represented, the deepest affection and the deepest respect. So much so, Mr. President, that I find it difficult now, with the emotions which stir my heart, to speak upon the subject.
FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

In the midst of our grief we must take new courage. His tired body rests in the long sleep which it has earned, worn out in the service of his country, worn out in the service of the ideals of this man who became as much a casualty of this war as any soldier, sailor, marine, or other American, or the follower of any flag, no matter upon what battlefield he may have fought, but his spirit, Mr. President, lives today, and it will continue to live and to inspire our country and to inspire the world.

In our grief let us take new courage, let us tighten our belts on this day of sadness, let us gird our loins, and, with unity, with courage, and with determination let us move forward to the attainment of the goal which he set for us not only here but throughout the world.

For the President's family I voice our inexpressible sorrow and grief. I cannot overlook or forget the stoicism, the courage, and the fortitude with which his wife accepts this visitation of Providence.

In the new President, who so lately was among us here, I express my utmost confidence, and assure him of my desire to cooperate. I believe I express the will of the Senate when I say that all of us here, without regard to politics, desire to accord to him that sympathetic cooperation which is so essential, and which he will need in the days which are to come.

Mr. President, in the light of the President's passing, in view of the sentiments which I have attempted feebly to put into words, I send to the desk, as in legislative session, a resolution which I ask the Senate to consider.

The Acting President pro tempore. As in legislative session, the clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 119), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has learned with profound regret and sorrow of the death of the late President of the United States, Hon. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, illustrious statesman and leader in the Nation and in the world.
Resolved, That as a token of honor and in recognition of his eminent and distinguished public services to the Nation and to the world, the Presiding Officer of the Senate shall appoint a committee of 16 Senators to join a similar committee to be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral services of the late President.

Resolved, That the Senate tenders its deep sympathy to the members of the family of the late President in their sad bereavement.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the late President.

Mr. White. Mr. President, within the span of my life, six Presidents of the United States have died in office or soon after the relinquishment of their official burdens. No one of them, no President since Abraham Lincoln, met the weight and complexity of problems which for 12 long years rested upon our President whose death we today sorrowfully note.

The passing of Franklin D. Roosevelt is one of history's somber tragedies. He was a great leader of our people and of world thought and effort. His genius in leadership was unmatched in the political life of our Nation. He had a vision which looked beyond the near, to new horizons, and he sought in these adventure and advance of our social, economic, and political frontiers.

Mr. President, he had a magnificent courage which lifted him above and beyond physical infirmities.

At the hour of his passing, there were bound to him in amazing degree the loyalty and affection of countless millions here and throughout the world. He rapidly and surely approached in the ending of war and his plans for a world organization of united nations, the grand climacteric of his career.

Mr. President, I am assured that great as is this country's loss, the tasks begun by President Roosevelt in behalf of victory, of justice, and of peace, will be finished, and that a better world will come. His indomitable spirit will lead in his death as he led in life.
To Mrs. Roosevelt and to her family go assurances of my deepest and my abiding sympathy.

Mr. Wagner. Mr. President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, the greatest man New York has ever given to the Nation, as great a man as America has ever given to the world, is gone.

As Moses, who brought from God to man the old commandments at the foundation of our ethics, died after seeing but before entering the promised land into which he was leading his people out of the wilderness, so Roosevelt, the modern spokesman for social justice, the modern champion of the liberties of all peoples, has left us just short of full attainment of his goals.

But let us take comfort that God gave him more than a glimpse of the success of his work. The President knew yesterday morning that victory was in our hands. He knew that the world organization, for which he strove, had become a reality. He knew that his voice in the wilderness, warning us of the dangers of international barbarism, had become a great voice heard by all mankind.

I remember Franklin Roosevelt as a young man in the New York State Senate, back in 1911, when both he and I were Senators in that body. He showed then of what he was made. When he started a battle for progressive legislation, or for good government, he never let up until his objective was attained. In the same way, he overcame a physical catastrophe that would have made most men lose hope. As President, he began at once to work with all his courage and great gifts, for the welfare of his fellow man. Nothing could deter him. He brought health to our economy by strengthening it with social justice. His reforms will be felt for generations.

That was the first half of his work. The second half began in 1937 or even earlier, when he commenced to fight fascism with all his heart, with all his soul, and with all his might. He aroused us to our danger. He organized us for victory. Now, with Berlin almost taken, our leader is fallen.

But Roosevelt still lives, and will ever live. His wisdom and example will guide his successor, Harry S. Truman, to whom our Nation now looks with understanding and confidence and full support in the great tasks falling upon him.

May America and the world have the strength to complete what Roosevelt more than started—to complete a just and lasting peace—and then finish here in America the task of creating opportunities for all the people to earn decent livelihoods, to live in good homes, to educate their children well, and to be protected in their illness and old age.

Franklin Roosevelt’s greatness will grow upon us all as distance gives us perspective. Like our very greatest Americans, in stature, he will become more and more heroic with the passing years.

I have known him, worked with him, and loved him for so many years, that I cannot say more now—except to express the sympathy we all feel for his brave wife and devoted children.

Mr. Vandenberg. Mr. President, words are pathetic messengers. In this hour of anxious tragedy, when the bowed hearts of all the civilized earth join ours this fateful morning in humble, poignant sorrow that Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the thirty-second President of the United States, has been gathered to his fathers, nothing that we say here can add to the glory of his stature or to the measure of our grief. He belongs now to history, where he leaves a mark which not even rushing centuries can erase.

Those who were his loyal opposition, no less than those who were his intimate associates, have always recognized in him a rare crusader for his human faiths, an amazing genius in behalf of his always vigorous ideals, a valiant knight in the armor of his commandership as he waged global war. We join the Nation and the world upon their knees this sorrowing morning before his deeply honored bier.

He bravely mastered his own physical handicap with a courage which never lapsed as he fought his way to an unprecedented pinnacle at home and to dominant influence around the world. His untimely death will be mourned at every hearthstone, and on every battle front where freedom wins the victory to which he literally gave his life. A successful peace must be his monument.

Mr. President, a new President of the United States has stepped from the Senate Chamber to take over responsibility in this critical hour. America moves on, mourning her great dead and pledging her loyalty to a new leader who grasps the torch of our destiny and faces the future unafraid.

I am instructed by the minority conference of the Senate to report that it met this morning and dispatched the following message to the President of the United States:

In this critical and sorrowing hour, when you are called to the supreme responsibility of the Republic, we send you this expression of our faith and trust in you, and the assurance of our sustaining prayers. We shall cooperate with you for the winning of the war and a successful peace at home and abroad. We have directed a committee to call upon you at your convenience to advise with you.

Mr. President, when the country staggered 80 years ago under the awful impact of the news that Abraham Lincoln was dead, James A. Garfield concluded a message to the Nation with ringing words, which I now make my own, "God reigns, and the Government in Washington still lives."

Mr. Connally. Mr. President, in the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt the world has lost its outstanding leader in the cause of peace, human progress, and welfare. He exerted a tremendous influence upon the world with regard to the establishment of an instrumentality for world peace and world security. I know that it would be his wish that this Nation and people continue to go forward in the cause which was close to his heart.

It is gratifying to know from the lips of the new President and from the lips of those who are directly concerned with the international affairs of the United States, that this work shall go on, and that at San Francisco we hope to realize the ambitions and the dreams of Franklin D. Roosevelt in the establishment of a world organization for peace and security.

Mr. President, while we are surrounded by the gloom of grief, while our people are bowed under the tremendous burdens that that grief brings us, I feel that Franklin Roosevelt died as he would have wished to die, in the midst of his duties and responsibilities and surrounded with the great tasks in which he wrought so wonderfully. I have always believed that if I were a farmer I should love to be called to my fathers out in my fields, surrounded by growing crops and lowing herds. If I worked in a shop, I should wish to be called amidst my tools and the implements of my toil. If I were an attorney at the bar, I should love to be called when I was pleading a cause which I regarded as just and right. If I were a statesman, I should love to feel that with my last expiring breath I had endeavored to advance the cause of human progress and development. If I were a soldier, I should prefer to die with a sword in my hand.

So I believe the President died as he would wish to die. He died with the armor upon him which he had worn so gallantly, and with a sword in his hand, fighting for triumph in this war and for the establishment of an instrumentality for peace.

I know that the new President—President Truman—will carry on the great work left in his hands. Already he has given expression to that purpose and that ambition—a purpose which will have the aid, support, and advice, not only of the Senate but of all responsible Government officials. I am confident that

President Truman will grasp the banner which has fallen from the lifeless hands of our great leader and will carry it on toward the achievement of our high purposes and our lofty ambitions.

The Acting President pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kentucky.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The Acting President pro tempore appointed the following Senators to attend the funeral services at the White House: Mr. McKellar, Mr. Barkley, Mr. White, Mr. George, Mr. Hayden, Mr. Wagner, Mr. Vandenberg, Mr. Connally, Mr. Thomas of Utah, Mr. Green, Mr. Mead, Mr. Tunnell, Mr. Millikin, Mr. Wherry, Mr. Cordon, and Mr. Saltonstall.

The Acting President pro tempore also appointed the following Senators to attend the funeral at Hyde Park: Mr. Barkley, Mr. White, Mr. La Follette, Mr. Wagner, Mr. Austin, Mr. Hatch, Mr. O'Mahoney, Mr. Guffey, Mr. Pepper, Mr. Hill, Mr. Mead, Mr. Lucas, Mr. Burton, Mr. Maybank, Mr. Ball, Mr. Ferguson, and Mr. McMahon.

Mr. Barkley. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late President of the United States, I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was unanimously agreed; and (at 12 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 16, 1945, at 12 o'clock meridian.
The Senate met in executive session at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of birth and of death, God of the living and of the living dead, in whose hands are the souls of the righteous, in merciful pity Thou seest the startled, saddened faces of Thy children of every kindred and clime lifted to Thee in sobbing sorrow. We cry unto Thee from an earth which seems strangely poorer since it gently opened to receive the discarded mortal garment of Thy servant, Franklin Delano.

O Thou help of the helpless and of those who walk in the valley of the shadow of death, we give Thee thanks for the work and worth of this greatest captain of his time, when revolutions have shaken the earth and ancient social landmarks have been swept away with the flood and fury of human discontent. For his clear vision of the nature and purpose of satanic forces which threatened to engulf the world, for his fine scorn of the snobbery of class and color, for his heroic triumph over bodily affliction and disability—a precious gift to our shattered sons who return from battle to face the same test—for his steadfast faith in the processes of democracy as the hope of today and the wave of the future, for his brave rebuke to all who would drag Americanism to the level of differing backgrounds rather than to lift it to the dream of common goals, we praise Thee, Thou master of all good workmen.

Upon his dearest in the bowed circle of grief pour the consolation of Thy love and the assurance that he has but entered another and larger room in the Father’s many-mansioned house.

Earnestly we pray for the anointing of Thy grace and the undergirding of Thy strength and the spirit of wisdom and understanding upon his successor in the high office, who steps from this Chamber and emerges from the loins of the common people to lead in the most awesome hour of history. Facing burdens and tasks too heavy for any man, use him as the channel of Thy purpose as in every crisis Thou hast used men of humble and contrite heart.

With him as the symbol of our national dedication and with our allies in this fight to make men free, we here highly resolve that the peace that is to be and the world united for peace and progress and an ampler life for all mankind shall be the high white monument leaping to the skies in memory of our lost leader. In the name of the blessed Lord whom he adored. Amen.

Mr. Hatch. Mr. President, the press of the Nation, the radio, through its programs and by its commentators, leaders in Congress, officials of the Nation, men and women in every walk of life—in fact, all the people of America—without regard to politics or other selfish consideration, have responded in our Nation's hour of sorrow, sadness, and tragedy in a manner such as the world has never before seen. Not as a public official but as an American citizen, I rise today to express my gratitude for the superbly wonderful way in which these tremendous forces have met what to a less courageous people might have meant disaster.

Press and radio—friend and foe of the previous administration alike—through editorial comment, through the news services and in every possible way, rose to the occasion with a patriotism never before witnessed in any country. Had the communications systems been directed and controlled, as they are in many countries of the world, the tributes to the departed Commander in Chief and the good will expressed for the incoming President could not have shown a more united spirit than was demonstrated here in free America by concerted, purely voluntary, and wholly cooperative effort inspired only by patriotic devotion to the Nation's welfare.

That same spirit of unswerving patriotism was manifest in every town and city throughout the land. In the pulpits of the churches, in memorial halls, in thronging crowds lining city streets and country lanes, America spoke her voice of sublime courage, faith, and confidence.

Let me now, Mr. President, in simple words, express to all of these and to every American, no matter where he lives or where he serves, on the battlefields or in civil life, my own great pride and faith in my country, her people, and her future, for, possessed by such indomitable courage, by such supreme faith, America will meet, overcome, and conquer every enemy of freedom and liberty on battlefield or domestic front. The spirit of a great people marches on—confident, triumphant, and unafraid—to the end, Mr. President, in the words of an immortal American, "that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swan-son, one of its reading clerks, communicated to the Senate the resolutions of the House adopted as a tribute to the memory of Hon. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, late the President of the United States.

Out of the depths have I cried unto Thee, O Lord. Lord, hear my voice: Let Thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplication. Almighty and merciful Father, who, in Thy inscrutable judgment and unsearchable way, hast called unto Thyself the soul of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Thy faithful servant, whom Thou didst permit to lead and govern our people during a portentous period in our life as a nation, we bow in humble submission to Thy holy will. In this hour of national sadness and grief we turn to Thee, the God of all consolation and hope, and we plead for him, for with Thee there is merciful forgiveness and plentiful redemption, that he may have the reward of eternal happiness; we plead also for ourselves, our country, and Nation, that what has been gained and won for us by a life that was unselfishly spent to bring to all his fellows the means to live in security and prosperity will be furthered by our efforts and prospered by Thee. We pray for victory over our enemies, over those forces of evil that threatened and would have destroyed our achievements as a nation and our ideals for a better and fuller life; and we pray that in a common victory with our allies we may soon restore to the nations of the earth, to all mankind, the blessings of freedom and peace; this we beseech Thee through the merits of Thy Son, our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

We have been profoundly shocked at news of tragic death of your President. For many years his words and his work have been an inspiration to all who have at heart welfare of human race. With infinite skill and patience he worked to preserve the peace of world and when all hope of peace was gone and war began he threw himself into struggle for survival of democracy with unremitting self-sacrifice and with a courage which has brought victory within our reach.

Name of Mr. Roosevelt is a household word in this country and our admiration of his personal qualities no less than of his work as leader of your great people was unlimited. All Australians today feel a personal sorrow at loss of a true friend, an inspiring world leader and a great humanitarian. His memory will be revered in Australia for all time.

CHILE

April 13, 1945.

His Excellency Edward R. Stettinius, Jr.,
The Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Excellency: With profound feeling I have received the kind communication of this date, by which Your Excellency officially informs me of the death of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, at Warm Springs, Georgia, at three thirty-five p. m. on April 12, 1945.

The Government of Chile, upon being appraised of this irreparable loss, instructed me to offer its sincerest condolences to the Government of the United States of America.

President Franklin Delano Roosevelt was the object of special devotion for the people of Chile, not only because of the high position he held, but also, and in exceptional manner, for his extraordinary personal capacity, for his ex-exceptional courage, his firmness and clear vision, in the service and defense of liberty, democracy and other fundamental principles of civilization.

The propounding of the Good Neighbor Policy and the great benefits conferred by it on all the nations of the Hemisphere, contributes to make even more profound the emotion which in these sad circumstances is experienced by the people and Government of Chile, who have always looked upon the illustrious deceased as the leader of a cause of transcendental proportions in the destiny of the Continent.

The President of the Republic of Chile, Juan Antonio Ríos, wishes to associate himself in particular with the expression of the sorrow of his Government, and notwithstanding the direct communication made by him, he has requested me to reiterate his expression to Your Excellency.

In the communication to which I have the honor to respond, Your Excellency informs me that in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution, the office of President of the United States of America has devolved upon Harry S. Truman.

The Government of Chile desires to convey its sincerest wishes for the success of the new Administration.

I transmit these expressions to Your Excellency, and through your high intermediacy to the Government of the United States of America, with the profound emotion I personally feel at the decease of the illustrious President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, whose loss, notwithstanding the tremendous significance it assumes under present circumstances, has contributed to emphasize the civic values of this nation, in the exemplary observance of the democratic process.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

COLOMBIA

His Excellency Harry S. Truman,
President of the United States of America,
Washington, D. C.:

In name of my people deeply moved by the death of President Roosevelt. I wish to express to Your Excellency the feeling of grief of Colombians. President Roosevelt had risen to the stature of the greatest men of America, to that of Washington, Bolivar, and San Martin, Jefferson and Lincoln. He was the interpreter of the conscience of the free world and without him the victory, the culmination of which we await very shortly, would have been, if not impossible, extraordinarily difficult. For our nations President Roosevelt was the creator and the defender of a policy which received in Mexico a few weeks ago its historical consecration as the American policy. And he was also the disseminator of principles of international conscience which are today those of the three Americas. And, with the aid of this continent they shall be, in a not distant day, the principles of the universe, if we wish just peace and true security. Roosevelt was our best neighbor and his country during the years of his term of office only increased in popularity, friendship, prestige among the nations of the hemisphere. There will not be, Excellency, a single place on earth where this news will not cause disturbance and regret because there was not a single one which under his stimulus and direction the efforts of the American people to free the world from fear, want, injustice, despotism did not reach. At this hour which is one of mourning for Colombia also we pray to God that the great nation over which you are going to preside will vigorously terminate the undertaking which Roosevelt began and that it will take courage in the thought that the virtues of the great American of our time, his generous and human spirit, resistance and adversity, intuition of the future, are those of your nation. Accept, Excellency, the manifestation of our solidarity with the grief of the United States.

Alfonso Lopez,
President of Colombia.
FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

ECUADOR
QUITO, April 13, 1945.

His Excellency HARRY TRUMAN,
Vice President of the United States,
White House, Washington:

I convey to Your Excellency in the name of the Ecuadoran people wholeheartedly for freedom, the rights of man and the moral concept of life the most profound grief at the sudden and unfortunate death of the illustrious President Roosevelt. The memory of this eminent magistrate who with Washington, Lincoln, Wilson will figure among the greatest men of the United States [and] will always be respected by the Latin-American people and by the citizens of the world who believe in ascending, spiritual and divine purpose of history, when in a fleeting instant and abusing the disorientation of a grieved world desirous of new horizons the mechanical defiant and violent arrogance of materialist totalitarianism was artificially accentuated. The voice of the illustrious President Roosevelt was raised clearly, sincerely, and bravely without vague generalities to condemn in a decisive way the person and acts of totalitarian tyrants. There was a time when Roosevelt was the only precise moral orientation of the peoples and when the economic interests claimed the dignity and sovereignty of Latin American nations must be suppressed the world of Franklin Delano Roosevelt proclaimed the Good Neighbor Policy that one respects himself by respecting equality among all states, the personality of nations and the norms of solidarity and cooperation. President Roosevelt falls as a hero of morality and of the spirit crushed in the extraordinary struggle in order that humanity and justice and democracy may be effective for humanity. The spirit of Roosevelt will be the prompt and definitive victory of freemen.

J. M. VELASCO IBARRA,
President of Ecuador.
His Excellency Harry Truman,
Vice President of the United States of America,
The White House, Washington, D. C.:

I am deeply afflicted by the cruel loss which the United States has just suffered in the person of President Roosevelt whose name will be recorded in history as one of the most illustrious champions of democracy and human liberty. In rendering moved and admiring homage to the memory of the great leader who has passed on the eve of the final victory to which his indomitable energy and wise guidance of the American people have so powerfully contributed, all Egypt and I, myself, wish to assure Your Excellency and the noble American Nation of our very sincere participation in their sorrow.

FRANCE

PARIS, April 13, 1945.

President TRUMAN,
Washington:

It is with great emotion and profound sadness that the French Government and people learn of the death of the great President Roosevelt. He was, in the eyes of all humanity, the symbolic champion of the great cause for which the United Nations have so suffered and fought in the cause of liberty. He was not able to live long enough to see the triumphant end of this war in which his noble country is struggling in the front rank. At least, the decisive successes to which he has so powerfully contributed gave him the certainty of victory before he succumbed at his post of combat. He leaves the world an imperishable example and an essential message. That message will be heard. He was from his first day to his last a faithful friend of France. France admired him and loved him. I express to you, Mr. President, its fervent homage to the memory of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt and its sentiments of extreme sympathy and of grieving friendship for the great American people.

Hon. E. R. Stettinius, Jr., Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Secretary: I have been directed by the Hon. Walter Nash, Acting Prime Minister of New Zealand, to convey to you the following message from the Government of New Zealand:

"We have learned with the deepest regret the tragic news of the death of President Roosevelt. His passing is a blow to the free peoples of all the countries of the world. Democracy had no greater friend, and his inspiring leadership in its cause will ever be remembered. He was the ardent champion of the underprivileged, not only in his own country but everywhere. His contribution towards lifting the world out of the depression was unsurpassed. His wise measures and kindly counsel were listened to and were to the benefit of all the people of all countries. We here in New Zealand will ever cherish a grateful memory of his friendship and inspiration both before and during the present world war. His guidance of his country during the prewar period and the early years of the war came second only to his unparalleled contribution after the United States entered the conflict. Lend-Lease among other epoch-making conceptions will keep his memory green in all countries that have been saved by its help. His decisions as Commander in Chief of the United States Forces have made a major contribution in the direction of the conflict towards the victory we hope soon to enjoy. Like earlier great leaders he has led the world towards the victory that will make possible peace among the Nations, but he will not be here to enjoy the fruits of the work which he has done. He was a citizen of the world in the greatest and truest sense and his death is an irreparable loss to the cause of freedom.

"To Mrs. Roosevelt and her family, to his colleagues in the Government, and to all United States citizens, the Government and people of New Zealand and its Island territories extend their sympathy at the loss of a great son of a great people."

Yours sincerely,

JOHN S. REID, Chargé d’Affaires.

and the same nobility, so that with the great victory forged by his extraordinary and dynamic personality already in sight, the ideal of a better world may be realized.

With the painful impression caused by the unexpected death of the illustrious President and admired friend, Hon. Franklin D. THAI

The Royal Thai Legation,

The Honorable Edward R. Stettinius, Jr.,
Secretary of State, Department of State,
Washington, D. C.

Sir: I have the honor to express to Your Excellency my most sincere and heartfelt condolences on the sudden and tragic death of His Excellency President Roosevelt. I feel sure that I am truly expressing the feelings of my people when I say that all Thais will find this bereavement almost as difficult to endure as the American people.

I would not presume to add my inadequate eulogies to the memory of a man who is assured of his place among the great benefactors of mankind. I would, however, venture to recall with the utmost gratitude that on the day following Pearl Harbor the President was gracious enough to include the following passage in his message to Congress:

"A little over a hundred years ago, in 1833, the United States entered into its first Far Eastern treaty, a treaty with Siam. It was a treaty providing for peace and for dependable relationships."
It is my firm hope and belief that when that peace, for which the late President labored so mightily, returns once more to the world, there will be a resumption of the former happy and dependable relationship between our two countries.

In conclusion, I would very much appreciate Your Excellency’s good offices in conveying my deepest sympathies to Mrs. Roosevelt and to the members of her family.

I have the honor to be, Sir, with the highest consideration,

Your Excellency’s obedient servant.

TURKEY

His Excellency Mr. Truman,

Washington, D. C.:

The sudden death of President Roosevelt distressed me most profoundly. The entire Turkish nation joins me in view of this event which is as grievous as it is unexpected, coming at a moment when a world conference was preparing to submit to his great auspices the bases of the future organization of the peace. During my conferences in Cairo I had the opportunity of becoming acquainted personally with the eminent qualities, the humanitarian sentiment, and the absolute sincerity which permitted the illustrious deceased to serve not only our friend the American Nation but also the entire world, of which history will eternally keep a record of gratitude. Bowing before the grave of the great President, in my own name as well as in the name of the Turkish people, I share in the grief which has struck the United Nations so cruelly and beg Your Excellency to accept my most sorrowful condolences.
